Another big heist in Carmel

Gunmen nab $260,000 in Oriental rugs from Conway of Asia

By SCOTT BREARTON

POLICE BELIEVE the gunmen who stole 11 Oriental rugs from a Carmel store last week are from Los Angeles and may also be responsible for three similar crimes committed during the last month in Northern and Southern California.

"We believe (the suspects) were all recruited from the Los Angeles area," said Carmel Police Detective Sgt. Pete Poitras.

Los Laureles Lodge owners may appeal

By SUSAN BECK

THE OWNERS of Los Laureles Lodge in Carmel Valley are reviewing their options for appealing the Monterey County Board of Supervisors' Jan. 18 decision to issue a temporary use permit for outdoor music.

Gordon and Noel Hentschel, who purchased the 104-year-old establishment in 1989, closed the lodge's doors last week in response to the supervisors' "anti-business" attitude regarding a dispute about amplified music by surrounding neighbors.

Although Los Laureles Lodge is for sale for $4.7 million, the Hentschels are considering the possibility of appealing the limited six-month use permit.

They were encouraged to do so by numerous community leaders and residents, who are gathering petition signatures supporting the Hentschels' view that government should not interfere with business.

"We'd like to see it work out," Noel Hentschel said. "It was not easy to decide to close Los Laureles."

Carmel Sun to fold after today's issue

By DOUG THOMPSON

THE PRESSES will stop rolling at the Carmel Sun effective with today's issue, several reliable sources have told The Carmel Pine Cone.

Although Stan Hall, editor of the Sun, declined to comment on the reports, sources have confirmed the newspaper will cease operation after publication of today's issue.

The Sun was expected to make an announcement to its readers in its Feb. 10 issue. The Pine Cone was told that Hall's health was the chief reason behind the decision to shut down the Sun.

Sources said the Sun's owners decided to cease operations rather than make an attempt to sell the publication.

The news of the Sun's demise was met with disappointment by the paper's founder, Debbie Saxton.

"It's a real shame," said Saxton, who still resides in Carmel Valley. "The valley will feel a great sense of loss. It's a shame to see a lot of hard work go down the drain."

Saxton started the newspaper out of her home in December 1980, introducing it as a four-page monthly publication known as the Carmel Valley Sun. In less than two years, Saxton said the two-person operation moved to an office in the village and the newspaper began to grow, publishing "anywhere from 20 to

ALBERT EISNER: 1930-1994

Carmel warrior loses battle with leukemia

By PAUL WOLF

CARMEL-BY-the Sea has lost one of its toughest warriors and most outspoken defenders of controlled growth.

Albert Eisner, a former publisher of The Carmel Pine Cone and publisher and founder of the Monterey Peninsula Review, was an environmentalist, businessman, supporter of the arts and civic activist.

A peninsulan since 1968 and Carmel resident since 1987, Eisner died Tuesday morning of leukemia at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. He was 63.

Eisner, a devoted sailor, spent many of his last days aboard his yacht, Passport. Last fall, he fulfilled a lifelong dream by taking his wife, Birgit, on a cruise to Mexico.

Long remembered will be the familiar images of Eisner — at the podium making an impassioned plea before the Carmel City Council; in front of the post office, wielding petitions in the fight against last year's commercial rezoning.

Despite his best efforts, Measure H squeaked by with a 10-vote margin, even though rezoning supporters outspent Citizens Against Rezoning many times over.

"I didn't always agree with him, but he was never afraid to put his mind, his energy and his words into what he felt was best for Carmel," said Mayor Ken White, who supported Measure H. "He was feisty, the last of a dying breed."

AL EISNER spent many of his last days aboard his yacht, Passport.

According to David Maradei, a former city council member and longtime friend, Eisner had "no respect for apathetic people," stressing the duty of every person to get involved.

"Al's interest in his community was as much a part of his life as eating and sleeping," said Maradei, who stepped down from the Carmel Residents Association leadership to join Eisner in opposing Measure H.

Eisner took up other causes as well, such as opposition to the Hatton Canyon freeway. Said Maradei: "He was a major supporter of the Brown Act — and the belief that all meet-

Carmel Red Cross volunteers return from earthquake relief operation

By SCOTT BREARTON

BOB KOHN and Laurie Schumann have come home.

Kohn and Schumann, both volunteers with the Carmel-by-the-Sea chapter of the American Red Cross, returned Feb. 2 after a 10-day assignment in earthquake-torn Southern California.

While the pair was clearly glad to be home, they indicated their work was both rewarding and appreciated by those families displaced by the Jan. 17 temblor.

"I like to help people," Kohn said. "I think in a certain stage in life, you like to help people – or you should."

At 73 years old, Kohn, who is also a Carmel Forest and Beach Commissioner, says he is "very active" and he feels good about himself.

During their assignment, Schumann and Kohn helped run an emergency shelter set up at Fillmore Middle School in Ventura County. According to Kohn, the shelter served about 150 people (mostly Hispanics) who worked in the orange groves near Fillmore, a rural town of 12,000.

"Somebody (at the shelter) asked me, 'why did you leave beautiful Carmel to come to a place like this with a problem like this?'" Schumann said. "I'm fortunate enough to be in a position to be able to give to someone else."

Kohn said the primary role of the Red Cross is to provide emergency aid in the form of food, shelter, housing and counseling – to determine the needs of individual families.

"I think the Red Cross does a very good job in that respect," said Kohn. "They know how to handle earthquakes because there's been so many of them lately."

Letters say it all

Kohn said the "beautiful letters" he recently received from people he met in the shelter say it all.

In one letter addressed to "Bob and Laurie," a man wrote, "Before all this shaking started, I always thought of people as selfish and self-centered, with few exceptions to the rule.

"Now I must say there are a lot of kind people in this world, but I have never in my life met any persons as kind as you folks."

Another woman wrote, "It was a horrible thing that happened to us, but thanks to that, we had the opportunity to meet and to know such kind people.

"You didn't see religion, color, illegal or legal people. You treated us all equally."

Schumann said while the major problems were confined mainly to the urban areas of Southern California, the problems in Fillmore were similar to those experienced in Watsonville, following the Loma Prieta quake in 1989.

LAURIE SCHUMANN

"Houses were knocked off their foundations," Schumann said. "Buildings were knocked down. The main street was closed off."

"It's going to take a long time to get everything back together again," she added.

As the Fillmore Middle School shelter manager, Schumann, 64, was responsible for inspecting the facility and ensuring that food and supplies were properly distributed. She said part of the job entailed completing paperwork and solving problems – among volunteers and shelter residents.

'The Fillmore Hilton'

Schumann also set up a residents' committee and unofficially changed the name of the Fillmore Middle School to the "Fillmore Hilton."

Bill Monning hopes to restore faith in system

■ Salinas attorney sets sights on 27th District Assembly seat — may be McPherson's foe.

By PAUL WOLF

ASSEMBLY HOPEFUL Bill Monning considers himself both a believer in government and an advocate of its reform.

To Monning, these notions are not contradictory. The candidate for the 27th District Assembly seat, now occupied by Bruce McPherson, insists reform and restoring confidence in the democratic process go hand in hand.

"I am of the point of view," said the Salinas attorney, "that government is the mechanism by which people define their future and their quality of life. I believe we have to restore hope in the process. Right now, we face a tremendous lack of confidence in government."

The assembly race includes a June primary and a November runoff. Indeed, if it came down to a battle between Republican McPherson and Democrat Monning, the candidates would clash not only on specific issues, but in their philosophies of government.

Different kinds of reform

Last fall, McPherson's call for governmental reform — namely, streamlining the permit process — dovetailed nicely with his belief in a more limited role of government — one that serves primarily as "facilitator" of the process, as opposed to activist.

Last November, the 49-year-old McPherson, a former newspaper editor and political neophyte, was victorious against opponent Gary Patton, the 19-year Santa Cruz County supervisor.

The 42-year-old Monning agrees with McPherson that state government has "too much unnecessary regulation," but Monning still believes it must aggressively and creatively tackle the problems it faces. Some of the issues Monning stresses are health care, access to higher education, crime and the continuing recession.

Monning became nearly a household name last year when he placed highly in the primary for a vacant U.S. House of Representatives seat. Then-Assemblyman Sam Farr went on to fill that seat, left by Clinton Budget Director Leon Panetta, but Monning's strong grassroots effort left an unmistakable impression.

Monning's refusal to accept political-action committee (PAC) money during the congressional primary influenced Patton's subsequent approach to the assembly race against McPherson.

"I believe there is a corrupting influence associated with large amounts of special interest money," Monning maintains.

Running against McPherson, Patton, too, rejected PAC contributions. However, Patton's reformist intentions could not fend off the hazards of incumbency: Patton was branded a "professional politician" and an entrenched party player.

Monning, like McPherson, can boast an "outsider's perspective," without the disadvantages of having a record.

He said if he should emerge victorious from the June primary, he would like to sit down with McPherson and agree to guidelines for the November runoff.

What about PACs? What about campaign conduct? The Democrat said he plans not to "run this campaign by attacking Bruce McPherson, but to stick to the issues."

Traditional concerns

As for the issues, Monning said his traditional concerns focus on the rights of workers, women, minorities, students and ordinary citizens not tied to powerful special interests.

On the hot topic of the day, Monning explained he opposes the "three-strikes, you're-out" crime initiative, which he complains applies an "inadequate formula" to complex punishment decisions. He favors retaining indeterminate sentences and believes plea bargaining is a valuable component of the penal system.

The best way to keep violent offenders off the streets is to allow parole officials "to give tremendous scrutiny before allowing anyone back out on the streets," said Monning, who characterized himself as being "as tough on crime as anybody."

He is not in favor of building more prisons; he would rather see the same resources directed to root causes — to education, health care and social programs that are more cost-effective than incarceration.

In addition, he believes drug abuse cases should be decriminalized, treated as "social and medical problems." Prison cells should be left for violent offenders.

Monning cautioned against simplistic views concerning the ongoing recession. He noted that economic recovery depends on a "skilled and available work force," a good health care system, controlled crime and quality education.

Monning, who teaches a course in mediation and conflict resolution at the Monterey Institute of International Studies, supports the Fort Ord reuse plan for

Out of sight, not mind: 'EOC' hidden asset in disaster

Major disaster drill will take place in Carmel in April

By PAUL WOLF

IN THE wake of the Monterey County Grand Jury's report stating Carmel and other cities are ill-prepared for a major disaster, the city intends to stage its first multi-departmental drill this April.

The event may take place with the help of the Carmel Red Cross, "but at the moment we don't know how extensive it will be," said Carmel City Administrator Jere Kersnar, who preferred to characterize the drill as "an exercise of the disaster plan."

While Kersnar said the exercise has been the subject of discussion for many months, Carmel Mayor Ken White said last month's grand jury report was a spur to orchestrate such an event.

"I want to see if our city is prepared for a major disaster," White said, defiant over the controversial report, but recognizing the need to practice. "It's going to be a very realistic drill."

But Kersnar suggested it would not be that realistic. "There will be no disaster scenarios given out," he said.

However, Kersnar did say the exercise would be extensive enough to "activate" the city's emergency operating center (EOC), located under the Carmel Police Department.

Kersnar reiterated his opinion that the grand jury report was "poorly researched and basically unfair." Yet he admitted the "basic conclusion is accurate — not just for us, but for practically every city throughout the state."

The Carmel City Council will be asked next month for its sanction of the event, the mayor said.

Since the grand jury's findings were made public in early January, White has been approached by residents who have expressed their concerns about the city's level of readiness.

"The report has certainly brought this conversation to the forefront," White said.

■ City officials battling impression left by report

By PAUL WOLF

IT REMAINS obscured from view — perhaps known only to a few Carmel residents.

But the city's underground emergency operations center figures prominently in the argument that the village is better prepared for a major disaster than it is given credit for.

The "EOC," as city officials like to call it, has been created in anticipation of a major earthquake, tsunami or other catastrophe. The concrete bunker, situated below the Carmel Police Station, would be the command station for emergency operations and record-keeping should other city facilities become unsafe or inaccessible.

City officials remain concerned about the impression left by the 1993 Grand Jury Report, which announced early last month that most cities within the county, Carmel among them, were unprepared for a major disaster.

The only jurisdictions spared the harsh critique were the City of Pacific Grove and Monterey County. These two may have other things going for them as far as disaster-readiness is concerned, but neither has a comparable EOC, according to city officials.

Pacific Grove, for example, would operate its emergency command center out of the above-ground Community Room on Junipero Avenue.

Investigation from afar

Carmel city officials complain no one on the grand jury bothered to visit the EOC, which is now about 85 percent finished. "I disagree with the feeling the grand jury left — that nothing has been done for Carmel to prepare for a disaster," said Fire Chief Bill Hill, who gave a Carmel Pine Cone reporter a personal tour.

"We are not bashful about saying we have a ways to go, but you can just look around and see that a lot has been done."

Hill agreed the city's state-mandated disaster plan needs to be completed, more citywide drills should be carried out, and further staff training is essential. But the evolution of the EOC over the past decade is symbolic of the city's ongoing efforts to improve readiness.

In fact, Assistant City Administrator Greg D'Ambrosio likened the development of the EOC — made possible only with the help of hundreds of volunteer hours — to "creating a miracle out of a wasteland."

Smart planning

It all began with a bit of good foresight, according to Hill. Two-and-a-half decades ago, when the police and public works building was being put up, the basement was shrewdly outfitted with a "concrete shell."

The EOC exists now because even Carmel has a relic of the Cold War, Hill suggested. "Our EOC program began with nuclear protection in mind," he said.

Years ago, officials from the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) toured the site and gave it a high rating as a well-protected as command center,

Hentschels say they're moved by support of community

The Hentschels, who also own the Stonepine Resort in Carmel Valley, have invested $2 million to restore the historic lodge. "It was done to make it a place the community would be very proud of," said Hentschel. "We've been very moved by the people who have come out to support us."

Despite their belief that any use permit is unwarranted, Hentschel and her husband had agreed to work within the guidelines set by the board. However, when the supervisors told them they would have to come back in six months for a review, she remarked, "We were s

The use permit's temporary status concerned Hentschel more than anything else. She said it might add fuel to the fire by encouraging the neighbors who complained for the past year-and-a-half to "look for more things to complain about."

Hentschel said the lodge has never had a use permit before for outside activities including music. In addition, she noted, most resorts in Carmel Valley are located near residential areas. The board of supervisors' decision to appease the complaints of a few neighbors, she added, might set a precedent that could be detrimental to future business.

NOEL HENTSCHEL at Los Laureles Lodge in Carmel Valley Village.

Government involvement can be very problematic, Hentschel said. "It gets back to basic economics. In today's economy, it's very difficult just to stay in business. We have to look at ways to make business more successful rather than ways to shut them down."

While Hentschel acknowledged more than 100 residents had signed a petition against amplified music at the lodge, she believes the petition presented misinformation. Having contacted several residents who signed the petition, Hentschel found most "didn't have the whole picture, and they were upset (that they had been misled)."

The Hentschels had agreed to all but two of the conditions set by the board of supervisors. They agreed to one event a day, 36 days a year, that would be over by early evening. "That's 329 days without events," Hentschel said. "Ninety percent of the time — nothing."

The Hentschels didn't agree to hiring a sound technician for every event because the cost ($800 to $1,000) would be prohibitive to pass on to the client, said Hentschel. And, she noted, "If we are to have a use permit, we wouldn't want one that was open-ended. We would want permanent guidelines to follow so that we could do what we need to do and continue operating our business."

Open house

If possible, Hentschel would like to work with the residents rather than have the county intervene. She said she would be happy to sit down with anyone who wants to talk with her about their complaints, "if that will help."

Noel and Gordon Hentschel moved to the Monterey Peninsula in the early 1980s. They chose to live in Carmel Valley, they say, because it's a wonderful place to raise their seven children.

Both believe the success they enjoy should be shared with others. While one aspect of their lives is business, they say they adhere to a personal commitment to help the community.

"It's not all about signing checks," Noel Hentschel said. "Restoring Los Laureles Lodge has been a labor of love for the entire family. It was supposed to be a longtime commitment."

Supervisors approve Ryters' right to build at Otter Cove

By SUSAN BECK

THE MONTEREY County Board of Supervisors unanimously voted Tuesday to uphold a Monterey County Planning Commission decision that allows Stephen and Wendie Ryter the right to build an ocean-front home south of Otter Cove on Highway 1.

After two hours of testimony from equal numbers for and against the planning commission's decision, the board decided all the evidence clearly stipulates the Ryters have the right to build on their land.

Stephen Ryter was elated by the board's decision and praised the neighbors who "supported my right to develop my property."

Joining the neighbors who opposed Ryter's building application were the League of Women Voters of the Monterey Peninsula, the Monterey Peninsula Regional Park District and the Ventana Chapter of the Sierra Club.

The board focused on two issues raised by opponents of the proposed 7,625-

Local volunteers return from L.A. earthquake relief operation

Schumann, a retired teacher who moved to Carmel in 1984, explained the shelter will not close until each resident finds alternate housing.

"As soon as you open the shelter, the goal is, 'how soon can we close it?,'" Schumann asked. "In other words, how soon can we return the residents of the shelter to their normal lifestyle – back in their own homes and living in their communities as they did before the disaster."

Schumann and Kohn are members of the Disaster Services Human Resources (DSHR) System, a program administered by the national headquarters of the American Red Cross in Washington, D.C. When disasters occur which require additional personnel assistance beyond what is available in the local area, volunteers in the DSHR system are canvassed about their availability for possible assignments of up to three weeks.

From those DSHR volunteers who indicate they are available for an assignment, officials select personnel who possess the training and skills needed in a particular disaster response operation and make assignments accordingly.

The DSHR system is a large, nationwide pool of volunteers trained in shelter management, family services case work, mass care, supply, damage assessment, health services and emergency response.

This assignment was Schumann's first disaster relief operation beyond local chapter operations and those assisting in neighboring chapters. It was Kohn's third. He previously served in Kaui, Hawaii for three weeks in the aftermath of Hurricane Iniki in 1992, and in St. Louis, Mo. for three weeks in 1993, responding to the flooding in the Midwest.

There's no way around it. You use more energy in the winter. It gets cold. You turn up the heat. You stay a little longer under the shower. So your winter energy bills shoot up. Which hits hard if you're not ready for it. And in today's economy, a lot of people aren't ready for it.

PG&E'S WINTER STRETCH PROGRAM MAKES IT EASIER FOR YOU TO PAY WINTER BILLS. PG&E has a package of services called Winter Stretch that gives people more ways to manage their energy bills. Right now, you can stretch out your current winter bill, including any past due balance, over an entire year. You can average your future monthly payments, too. Which means you pay almost the same amount every month. No highs. No lows. No finance charges. Your home must be individually metered to qualify.

OTHER WINTER STRETCH PROGRAMS CAN ALSO HELP.

• SPECIAL PAYMENT ARRANGEMENTS. We'll give customers more time to pay their bill, based on individual needs.

• REACH (Relief for Energy Assistance through Community Help). This program is administered by the Salvation Army and covers a one-time payment for low-income households experiencing financial hardship.

In 1994, PG&E is increasing its contribution to this program by $1 million, bringing PG&E's total REACH contribution to $3 million. Customer and employee contributions, totalling $2.4 million last year, are also expected to increase in 1994.

• ECIP (Energy Crisis Intervention Program). For low-income households who are experiencing energy-related emergencies, this federally funded program provides assistance.

• LIRA (Low Income Ratepayer Assistance). PG&E provides a 15% discount on monthly energy bills for qualifying low-income households.

• HEAP (Home Energy Assistance Program). This federally funded program gives help to low-income households that fall within 130% of federal poverty guidelines.

• MEDICAL BASELINE. For customers with medical needs, PG&E provides additional gas and electricity at the lowest rates.

• RATE OPTIONS AND RATE ALTERNATIVES. There may be lower rates for customers who are large energy users or who can switch their use to off-peak hours.

This winter, take the chill out of your energy bills and sign up for any of the Winter Stretch programs. Call your local PG&E office about them or look for the enrollment information in your next PG&E bill.

Carmel Sun folds effective with this week's edition

24 pages every other week."

Saxton, weary from the long hours involved with publishing a newspaper, sold the Sun to valley resident Dick Heuer in November 1986.

Heuer, who likewise expressed sadness that the newspaper he once headed was reportedly folding, said he operated the Sun for three years until selling it to Hall and his wife, Isabelle, in the fall of 1989.

"The paper really needed to go weekly, and that was more than I could handle," Heuer said.

When they purchased the Sun, the Halls had been living in Carmel Valley for nearly a year after moving there from Detroit, Heuer said. Stan Hall had been working in public relations for General Motors, while Isabelle Hall maintained real estate interests. Both formerly worked for the now-defunct United Press International.

During its more than 13 years in existence, the name of the newspaper changed from the Carmel Valley Sun to the Weekly Sun to the Carmel Sun.

The last name change took effect in the spring of 1993 when the newspaper, buoyed by the addition of new investor Stanley Stillman, opened its first-ever office in Carmel. The Sun also maintained a Carmel Valley office as well.

The last official circulation figures showed the Sun was distributing 11,500 newspapers weekly.

Protecting Your New Home

When you buy a new home, your lender will require that you have a hazard insurance policy before you go to the closing table. As a minimum, your coverage must pay for rebuilding your home, should it be damaged or destroyed.

In assessing your insurance needs, remember that the total cost of your home includes both the structures, and the land on which they are built. You need to cover only the buildings. Whether or not your lender requires it, you should also purchase liability insurance that will cover you if someone is injured on your property, as well as personal property coverage. You should contact your insurance agent well before your closing date. You can discuss your individual situation so he or she can tailor your coverage to meet your family's individual needs. You will have many options, especially in the area of personal property insurance, and some advanced planning will help you get the most insurance value for your dollars.

CVPOA installs new board officers, directors

By SUSAN BECK

NEWLY ELECTED officers and directors of the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association were installed last night at All Saints' Episcopal School in Carmel Valley.

Robert Greenwood is the association's new vice president and Loren Steck, Christopher Cayce and Gillian Taylor are new directors. Incumbent officers are Roger Williams, president; Wendy Grimes, secretary, and Ileene Crane-Franks, treasurer.

Incumbent directors are Pat Bernardi, Dale Eberly, James Flippen, Joyce Herman, Nancy Porter, Lee Rieman, Pete Salmonsen and Allan Sandstrum.

While no one has ever challenged an incumbent CVPOA officer, Greenwood decided to run for George Ferguson's vice president position because, as he said, "Ferguson represented a passive voice toward development projects in Carmel Valley."

Greenwood, a longtime valley resident and member of CVPOA, doesn't believe it was sentiment that prompted voters to elect him to the vice presidency. He hoped his Feb. 1 victory reflects a consensus of preference for his philosophy toward preservation of the valley.

Many of the people who voted for him in last month's election, Greenwood observed, had been involved with the association during the late 1970s throughout the '80s "when it was a very activist organization protesting what they saw as an invasion of the valley by inappropriate subdivisions."

One of the valley's current key issues, Greenwood noted, is the Carmel Valley Master Plan. Some of the plan's policies are unquestionable, he said, adding, other policies are subject to interpretation.

"Interpretation is where CVPOA should take a strong stand," Greenwood said, "with an emphasis on preserving, protecting and defending the natural character and resources of the valley."

Loren Steck

Loren Steck said he is flattered to be a director of CVPOA.

Steck is most concerned about maintaining the quality of life as he knew it when he moved here in 1988.

"I know there is a lot of pressure to build in Carmel Valley," Steck said. "I would like to make sure any development that occurs is as least damaging as possible for the valley."

Steck, a professional surveyor, has offered his services to CVPOA. "It's important for the board to know what the residents' are concerned about," he noted.

Gillian Taylor

Taylor is excited about the opportunity to participate on CVPOA's board of directors.

She has lived on the Monterey Peninsula for the past 11 years, and moved to Carmel Valley three years ago. Over the years, Taylor observed that CVPOA has been actively committed to protecting the community.

"There are a lot of dedicated people involved with the issues," Taylor said. "For me, I'd like to get involved with reviewing the Carmel Valley Master Plan."

What concerns Taylor about the master plan is the number of houses allocated to be built in Carmel Valley. As it is now, she added, there is a demand to improve Carmel Valley Road to accommodate the current development.

"I don't think Carmel Valley Road could handle the amount of houses allowable in the master plan," Taylor speculated. "I feel the numbers should be reduced."

Chris Cayce

Cayce has lived in Carmel Valley since the last 1950s. After he bought a home there a few years ago, Cayce became interested in working to protect the area where he lived as a child.

"I have noticed a lot of development occurring in farm areas," Cayce said, "and I'd like to slow that down."

Cayce also is interested in Carmel Valley Road's capability to handle more traffic than it already currently is.

"My view is more slow growth oriented," Cayce remarked. "I'm not against all growth. But I certainly don't want to see Carmel Valley Road widened or expanded to four lanes."

Quick sale of Los Laureles expected

LOS LAURELES Lodge is expected to be sold by the first of spring.

Don Bowen, president of the Carmel Business Sales, Inc. — which specializes in business, restaurant and commercial property — said the 10-acre Carmel Valley property is one of the most intriguing pieces of land in the area and will sell within two to three months.

"We've had a lot of calls," Bowen said, "but nothing serious yet."

The lodge is being marketed to hotel owners and innkeepers both national and internationally, Bowen said, noting the $4.7 million sales tag for the newly-renovated 104-year-old lodge is in keeping with current market trends.

Commercial real estate throughout the country sells for three to six times the annual gross sales, Bowen explained.

Carmel's commercial property sells for seven to 10 times its annual gross sales, Bowen said.

There are 30 guest rooms at Los Laureles Lodge plus a separate guest house available for visitors. The cost per room ranges from $78 to $450.

Considering the $2 million investment to restore the lodge and its annual gross sales, Bowen remarked, "$4.7 million is not high."

Judge to rule on freeway EIR in writing

By PAUL WOLF

THE FEDERAL court judge who heard arguments supporting and opposing the environmental review for the Hatton Canyon freeway will submit a decision some time in the coming weeks.

In San Jose on Friday, Feb. 4, Judge Spencer Williams listened to both sides on the adequacy of the environmental impact report/statement (EIR/EIS) for the controversial freeway proposal.

"I expect he (Williams) will submit a decision in writing within the next few weeks," said Skip Lloyd, a Carmel resident and attorney who co-chairs the Hatton Canyon Coalition, which opposes the freeway.

Meanwhile, the California State Transportation Commission will decide on Thursday, Feb. 24 whether to authorize the $43 million already earmarked for project.

"It's still possible we could get a decision before then," Lloyd said. "But what impact it would have (on the CTC), I can't say."

The City of Carmel is joined with the coalition and two other entities in its legal challenge against the California Department of Transportation (Caltrans) and the Federal Highway Administration. The two agencies published the EIR/EIS, which was completed in October 1991.

In his review, the judge studied the document in question and the massive "administrative record" on which the EIR/EIS was based.

According to Lloyd, it was unclear before Friday's hearing whether the judge would make a decision immediately or wait to hand down a written decision.

Minnesota couple closer to building their 'dream home'

square-foot home on 5.6 acres at the southern end of the Carmel Sur Subdivision in the Otter Cove area: whether the findings of the planning commission were supported by the evidence; and whether the commission's decision was contrary to law.

The fundamental questions included whether the Ryters' vacant parcel was or was not included in the Otter Cove Subdivision and whether or not such a subdivision existed.

If the Ryters' two lots — valued at $3 million — were part of the Otter Cove Subdivision, the Big Sur Coast Land Use Plan permits existing vacant residential parcels visible from Highway 1 to be used for residential purposes.

If the Ryter property is not part of the subdivision, the property would be considered part of the county's "critical viewshed" land, a protected coastal area where construction is prohibited.

Clear designation

County planners said the area called the Otter Cove Subdivision is actually the Carmel Sur Subdivision, which is located in the Otter Cove area.

County staff explained that the Big Sur land-use plan designates the area south of Malpaso Creek and north of Soberanes Creek as the "Otter Cove Area," which includes the Ryters' parcel.

Staff added the Ryters' proposed house is located in an area that is exempt from "critical viewshed" restrictions but must be designed to minimize its visibility.

The design plans for the controversial house includes a roof made with a combination of sod and aged copper. Most of the house will be dug into the site at the furthest point from Highway 1.

Big Sur resident Tim Green said even if the Ryter's home is exempt, it still doesn't meet the conditions set by the Big Sur Land Use Plan.

He said many people have made a serious effort to conform to those conditions, which are slowly eroding from the approval process.

"An 8,000 square-foot house is like the zenith of that erosion," Green remarked.

Fifth District Supervisor Sam Karas said he had changed his mind several times about the planning commission's decision.

But in all fairness, he said, he had to support denial of the appeal after listening to staff and counsel.

Barbara Shipnuck, supervisor for the 2nd District and chair of the board, said anyone with a legal lot of record is allowed one residential home.

"We have always protected the right of people to build a home on their property," she concluded.

Dream house

Ryter, who currently lives in Minnesota, said he and his wife have loved the Monterey Peninsula for 30 years and have waited for the past 25 years to build "a dream home and establish an international trade business in the area."

What surprised the Ryters most during the planning commission hearing and Tuesday's board of supervisors hearing was the support from all of their neighbors in the Carmel Sur Subdivision, with the exception of their next door neighbor, who was "the primary opponent."

Opponents have 10 days to file an appeal to the California Coastal Commission said Tony Lombardo, attorney for the Ryters.

If an appeal is not filed, the board's decision is final 10 days after the coastal commission receives the board's findings, Lombardo said.

"If no one appeals," he added, "we can start to work on the 50 conditions on the application that need to be complied with."

Despite good week, there is still rainfall deficit

By PAUL WOLF

FEBRUARY SO far has been wet, but total rainfall for the year remains below average, according to California-American Water Co. readings.

As of Tuesday morning at 10 a.m., the season's rainfall, recorded at San Clemente dam, was 7.9 inches.

Average rainfall as of Feb. 8 is 11.8 inches, according to Darby Fuerst, water resources manager for the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District.

The water year begins Oct. 1. The numbers that Fuerst receives are recorded by Cal-Am.

Between Sunday morning and Tuesday morning, 1.7 inches fell, encouraging hopes that February could achieve its average of 4.2 inches.

Meanwhile, water runoff — generally considered a more important indicator than rainfall — is even more dramatically behind the normal volume. To date, stream flow is at 18 percent of average, according to Fuerst.

Some good news

Despite these numbers for the year so far, Fuerst reported some good news.

First, the system's water storage remains at close to 90 percent of capacity. Consequently, the prospect of rationing is not an immediate concern.

Second, the Carmel River has advanced over two miles in the past week. It now flows roughly to the Rancho Cañada golf course, about two-and-a-half miles from the coast.

City of Carmel moves ahead with preparations if disaster hits

according to Hill.

Inside, the EOC looks like a war room in some old movie or work of fiction. The underground facility is, of course, powered by an emergency generator.

The main room, called the "operations center," has a series of cubicles on two walls — separate stations labeled "medical," "logistics," "public works," "planning," and so on.

There are telephones, maps, a "plotting table" and storage areas. These items notwithstanding, the room seems remarkably spare.

The actual "command center" is a smaller room, equally spare. It contains a table and chalk board — this is the site of the "command staff" deliberation.

This elite group would not function as a democracy; the city administrator (Jere Kersnar) is the disaster coordinator, unless he is not available in the crisis. One individual has to be in charge and accountable, Hill said. There is no voting in the typical sense; however, this "brain trust," as Hill characterized it, would consist of an assortment of department heads, as specified in the city disaster plans.

The command center also includes some basic equipment for record-keeping, such as a copy machine and filing cabinet. "You need to start keeping records from minute one if you want reimbursement from FEMA," Hill said.

There is a separate "communications room," which includes multi-channeled radios, picking up statewide channels, as well as cellular phones and portable fax machines.

To complete the picture, there is also a room outfitted to serve amateur radios, although that facility is not yet complete.

"Communications get quite overloaded in a disaster," Hill said. "We don't want to have to do day-to-day communications with our equipment. This (amateur radio) system would get information back and forth to and from the state and the federal government."

Much of what one sees at the EOC is the result of the ongoing "scrounge job" that the city engaged in, to use City Administrator Jere Kersnar's term. Much of the comforts, everything from the carpeting to the cabinets, were salvaged from the old Crocker Bank, after it changed hands to Wells Fargo. The building is now the Harrison Memorial Library annex.

Much time, energy and planning has gone into the EOC, but no one in town is eager to see a return on this investment by experiencing a real-life disaster. Nevertheless, just because the underground facility remains out of sight, city officials believe that doesn't mean it should be out of mind when the subject of disaster-readiness arises.

Bill Murray puts Carmel High School's Marie Ishida in spotlight

DON'T TELL Marie Ishida, Carmel High School principal, that Bill Murray isn't good for the game of golf.

Even if Deane Beman, PGA Tour commissioner, may look down on Murray's antics on the golf course, Ishida's encounter with the comedian-actor will remain with her for a long time to come.

During last Wednesday's 3M Celebrity Challenge at the Pebble Beach Golf Links, one of the special events linked with the AT&T tournament, Ishida was on hand to accompany two Carmel High students — Danielle Wall and Brandon Roberts. # Police think gunmen have ties to Southland ringleaders

The prime suspects may be linked to three other robberies at Oriental rug stores: in West Hollywood on Jan. 5, in San Mateo Jan. 20 and in Newport Beach Jan. 29, according to Poitras.

"The number of similarities – in both the way the crimes were committed and the description of the suspects themselves – leads us to believe the possibility exists that the same group of suspects are responsible for the same four crimes," Poitras said. "This is not to say that in each case, exactly the same suspects were involved in the commission of the crimes.

"But we believe they were all recruited by the same group of individuals, which has not been identified. Efforts to do so are underway."

Poitras recounted the way the Carmel incident occurred.

At about 5:30 p.m. Wednesday, Feb. 2, Poitras said two men entered Conway of Asia, Inc. – located on Dolores Street near Seventh Avenue – and began asking questions about expensive Oriental rugs.

According to Poitras, the conversation between the suspects and store employees began to move to the rear of the store, where the men were being shown various rugs.

"All of the sudden, they produced handguns and announced it was a robbery," Poitras said. "The suspects assured the victims that if they cooperated, no harm would come to them."

Poitras said the gunmen forced all three employees to lie face down in the back room of the store, where they were bound and gagged.

The employees estimated there were probably two more suspects who helped the pair carry the room-sized rugs to a waiting van, based on the number of times the electronic security system sounded during the robbery.

Expensive antique rugs

"They're heavy and they're large," Poitras said, noting the antique rugs are valued at more than $250,000. "It's fortunate they were not able to remove all the rugs they apparently intended to."

The suspects also may have hurried for fear an alarm would be activated if the store was not closed by a certain time, Poitras said. Several rugs that were hanging on the walls of the store were taken down in haste but never loaded into the van.

"As a result, they may have fled earlier than they wanted to," he said.

According to Poitras, the Carmel Police Department received a call from one of the employees at 5:41 p.m., "about five minutes" after the suspects fled the scene.

While Poitras said the store employees never saw the escape vehicle, witnesses described it as a yellow Ryder rental van. He said a description of the van was broadcast to area law enforcement agencies immediately after officers received the information from witnesses.

"We sent out a county-wide bulletin and a statewide Teletype," he said.

Poitras explained that although the first unit arrived at Conway of Asia in two minutes and 10 seconds, it took witnesses seven minutes to mention the yellow Ryder van they had seen double-parked in front of the store. He said the bulletin was broadcast exactly seven minutes and 42 seconds after the police department first received the call, "more than enough time to get out of town."

Police stopped a vehicle matching the description of the van on Highway One near Fort Ord, but Poitras said "it was not the one."

"The van remains outstanding at this point," said Poitras.

Poitras said he and Carmel Police Chief Don Fuselier spent the following day interviewing witnesses. Poitras said several witnesses reported seeing two men – one with a cellular phone – apparently casing the area earlier in the day.

"After interviewing several witnesses," Poitras said, "we believe there were at least three, probably four (suspects involved) – all black males in their mid to late 20s."

Poitras said the lead suspect was described as a black male in in his late 20s to early 30s with a medium brown complexion. He also had a "five o'clock shadow," short, receding hair and wore dark eyeglasses, possibly with round frames (See composite sketch).

A statewide investigation is in progress.

the owner – says he's had enough.

"We aren't protected," Conway said. "There's no way we can be. The officers themselves will tell you that.

"Who's to blame?... not the police officers on the street. I don't know if it's the budget, administration, or whatever the case may be. But we're deluded into a false sense of security."

Conway urged business owners to better protect themselves by buying more insurance, installing state-of-the-art security systems or even hiring security guards.

"This represents a net loss to me," Conway said, noting Conway of Asia has liability and fire insurance, but "absolutely no coverage in the event of a

Peninsula Palate

By CHEF WENDY BRODIE

Soup's on!... Potage, soups and consommé, Part I

BY THIS time we have recovered from the holidays, made our vows for the new year, have started dieting and are looking for the healthy, low-calorie, yet comforting meals – ah the magical soups might just be the answer.

The word "soup" is derived from the Germanic word "sop," meaning the bread over which potage, broth or other liquid is poured, representing the rural archetypal meal. By definition soup is a liquid food. Traditionally, it is served at the beginning of a multi-course meal, or as a course itself. Soup and bread are inseparable.

The French have three different words for soups. Potage is a purée thickened with egg yolks or cream. Soupe is a hearty, thick, chunky mixture of food and consommé, a clear broth or stock.

Soups can be divided into two categories, clear and thick. Thick soups are further divided into groups, identified by their thickening processes. Purees are fine-textured smooth soups that have been put through a blender, food processor or food mill and usually thickened by a vegetable or fruit. Bisques are primarily made with shellfish (sometimes poultry or vegetables) and cream. Cream soups classically use a bechamel sauce, which is a sauce made from milk and a roux (flour and butter mixture). Velouté soups – which are made from broth thickened with roux – also incorporate egg yolks, cream and butter. Other lower calorie thickeners used are cornstarch, arrowroot, tapioca, potatoes and rice.

Unlimited freedom

For the creative cook, soups offer unlimited freedom. They can be served hot – perfect for cold weather, and cold – refreshing for hot summer days. Liquids of many kinds can be used, including water, broths of vegetables, meats, poultries and seafood, milks, wines and fruit juices. Bulky foods such as vegetables, legumes, fruits, meat, fish, game, poultry, shellfish, pastas, grains and even leftovers can be used. Soups can be seasoned with herbs – both fresh and dried whole – and ground or chopped spices.

Finally, the finishing touches are garnishes such as yogurts, sour cream, creme fraiche, cheese, potatoes, cubes of vegetable or plain custards, aiolis (garlic sauce), rouille (hot chilis, garlic and bread crumb paste), pistou or pesto (basil sauce), croutons, raviolis, diced vegetables or fruits, sprigs of herbs and on and on.

Now the challenge begins and the creative juices begin to flow with these infinite combinations. Nowadays, some health specialists say certain combinations of vegetables puréed raw with a little hot water are medical remedies.

Now that the "soup's on," meaning the meal is ready, the decision of how to present this nourishing feast comes to mind. At home, dish it up right out of the pot or that wonderful iron kettle. Put it right in the center of the table in a great looking terrine to have more than one helping. Or use a mug for an individual serving on the run.

Chefs can serve soups in cups, bowls (larger), or soup plates. Chefs love the creative display of soup plates, but whoever must deliver it to the table curses this recepticle because it sloshes all over by the time it is put before you and it cools off quickly. Individual baking dishes can be fun to use by putting them on a baking sheet and under the broiler to melt cheese, or to brown flavored cream or puff up a soufflé mixture floating on top.

For unique containers, use hollowed out vegetables or fruits, such as squashes or melons. Use shells for seafood chowders or even hollowed out french bread for a thick, chunky soup served immediately. Enjoy and remember to serve soup with the staff of life – bread.

Part II will include recipes concentrating on healthy, lower calorie soups.

Stanley Haynes, Chairman of the Board states, "We are pleased to report record annual earnings for 1993. The hallmark of First National Bank has always been the quality of our numbers and the consistency of our financial performance. The stability of our earnings, our quality loan portfolio highlighted by a lower than average ratio of nonperforming assets to average loans, and our strong capital ratio have continued to merit recognition year after year."

Conway is convinced the gunmen will return and he doesn't want to be in Carmel when they do.

"It's going to happen again," Conway predicted. "These guys are coming back for the rest of the rugs. They left $180,000 folded up and ready to go into the van."

"My wife will never come back in here," he added. "I'm not going to renew my lease. I'm not going to live like this."

And while Conway is grateful none of his employees were hurt or killed in the incident, he said they were severely traumatized and he remains concerned for their safety. He said he is worried the suspects know his employees may be able to identify them.

"If I were these guys (one of his employees)," said Conway, "I'd be more frightened than they are."

Conway said the robbers probably would have taken many more rugs if they had known how to carry them more efficiently. When he arrived at his store after getting a call from an employee informing him of the incident, he found nearly every rug taken off the walls.

"Something happened," said Conway. "I tend to think it wasn't the fact that the van was full. They didn't know how to get the rugs out. If you roll them, two guys could have carried them out.

"My wife could've gotten more rugs out than those guys did, because they didn't know how to take them. They had all these rugs folded up that they couldn't get out. Their dolly was still under them."

Conway believes the suspects may have had inside information about the rugs, given the caliber of those taken. One stolen rug, for example, was 22 feet-six inches long by 15 feet-six inches wide. According to Conway, it was a Persian antique rug woven for royalty in 1890.

"It was priced at $120,000, but it's priceless," Conway commented. "It's irreplaceable."

Conway said he doesn't think his rugs will surface in the U.S.

"They could either be on their way to Rio de Janeiro or purchased at 30 cents on the dollar by a prince in Saudi Arabia," he theorized. "Who knows?"

According to Conway, when he first arrived at the store, he tried to make himself useful but said he was put off by officers at the scene. As an example he cited a key witness, a young Hispanic man whose English was poor.

Conway said he offered to translate for the officer but was told to wait until the officer was through interviewing the witness.

"At that point, I was assured there was an APB (all points bulletin) out and they had all the (primary exits) blocked," Conway recalled.

Conway hinted the officers spent far too much time digging for mundane details and looking for evidence when time was of the essence and a pursuit was in order.

"I thought, 'what are you doing?' Why the attention to minute details when the van was still within six minutes of the scene?"

"They (police officers) are so proud of their response time," Conway remarked. "What good does that do?"

Conway said he's never had the experience where four men – "whether black, Hispanic or Caucasian" – could walk into his store and trample his life, livelihood, peace and security with total impunity.

"I'm not here to cast blame. I just want to make sure it doesn't happen again and I want my rugs back."

Conway is offering a $10,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible for the Feb. 2 armed robbery of his store.

Fighting fleas

WHY, YOU might ask, are we discussing fleas in the middle of winter? Because there's a very good chance you have fleas in your home right now — and this is a good time to begin your battle.

Fleas flourish in a warm humid environment. Winter weather causes the flea's life cycle to slow down so you won't see as many when the weather is cold. Although a good hard frost can destroy flea eggs by causing the egg casing to crack, they are resilient little critters that manage to survive despite the odds. We use bombs, dips, sprays, collars, shampoos, powders and still, they prevail!

Most experts agree that fleas mate on the animal's skin where they lay their eggs. The eggs fall off and incubate on furniture, in carpets, cracks and on bedding. After a few days, the eggs hatch into larvae which feed on what debris is available. Depending on environmental conditions, the larvae can take three weeks to two years, or more, to grow into adult fleas. By the way, did you know that viable flea eggs have been found in Egyptian tombs? I told you they were resilient!

The secret to controlling the flea population is not simply the eradication of adult fleas. Ridding your home of the eggs and larvae breaks the flea's life cycle and that's the theory behind products containing IGRs (Insect Growth Regulators).

Certain flea sprays, rug sprays and outdoor sprays contain IGRs. They harden the flea egg casing so the larvae can't escape. Products that contain IGRs have proven to be very effective when you combine them with other methods of flea control like thorough cleaning and vacuuming.

I don't think there's a better way to control fleas than by vacuuming. And I don't mean by just running your Hoover across the carpeting once a week. You have to thoroughly vacuum over, under and around each piece of furniture. Fleas aren't suicidal so you won't find them in the middle of the floor where they can be stepped on. They hide in cracks and baseboards so that's when you have to use your vacuum's crevice attachment.

As long as you have that vacuum cleaner out, how about vacuuming your dog? That's right, I said vacuuming your dog. If your vacuum doesn't have a circular attachment with little plastic "teeth," you can buy them at some pet supply stores as well as hardware and appliance stores. Believe it or not, vacuuming your dog will effectively remove fleas and other debris! If your dog isn't bothered by the sound of the vacuum, he might love the massage.

Don't forget to sprinkle some flea powder into your vacuum bag to take care of any little critters you might catch. Now get busy!

Ishida's moment in spotlight with Bill Murray at AT&T

and, in addition to receiving $1,000 scholarships, the students were allowed to follow the celebrities inside the ropes, giving them a birds-eye view of the action.

Before the celebrity shoot-out teed off, Wall and Roberts were introduced to the crowd. Then it was Ishida's turn to be introduced.

"I stayed in the background as along as I could," Ishida said.

She wasn't in the background for long, however, as Murray went in search of the principal.

"He grabbed me and pulled me out to the first tee," Ishida said. "Then he and Joe Pesci picked me up and threw me up into the air.

"They were just kidding with me. It was all in good fun."

While some have expressed their exasperation with Murray's antics at the AT&T, Ishida isn't one of them.

"His antics are fun," she said. "If they (the AT&T) don't want someone to joke around, then they shouldn't invite a comedian."

"Who Donates Better Blood for You Than You?" That is the title of a report published by the U.S. Food & Drug Administration, aimed at the people who face non-emergency surgery. In most non-emergency operations, patients don't need transfusions. But the report advises checking with the surgeon to see if it's advisable to donate your own blood in advance. Although volunteer blood donations now are thoroughly tested, the report acquiring an infectious disease by transfusion. # JOHNNY ON THE SPOT

Retrospective: A look back at a wild, wacky week at the 1994 AT&T

DURING THURSDAY'S first round at Spyglass Hill, there was no way to fathom that sweet-swinging Johnny Miller would be the eventual winner of the 1994 AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

By DOUG THOMPSON

WHEN THE NBC cameras begin to roll from the Los Angeles Open this week — the PGA Tour's next stop — the spotlight will be on Johnny Miller.

But Miller won't be on the course; he'll be back in the TV booth serving as a color analyst, just one week after his dramatic victory at the 1994 AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

There certainly weren't any pundits coming to this year's AT&T picking Miller to win it all. Names like Davis Love III, Chip Beck, Payne Stewart, Tom Kite and Mark O'Meara were on the tips of the experts' tongues when it came to forecasting a winner.

But who would have ever dreamed it would come down to Miller and Tom Watson?

When Miller won his first Crosby Pro-Am in 1974, here is a look at some of the names who shared the leader board with him: Grier Jones, Rod Funseth, Bruce Crampton and Dave Stockton. Shades of yesteryear. In fact, Stockton played in this year's tournament with his two sons, both of whom are in their 20s.

It stood to reason then that Miller, 13 years later, was called a "surprise winner" when he fended off Stewart, Bernhard Langer and Lanny Wadkins to win the second installment of the AT&T Pebble Beach Pro-Am in 1987.

When Watson captured back-to-back Crosbys in 1977 and 1978, the names he beat out included the

Boys hoop team gains revenge against Palma, will face Stevenson Friday night at CHS

THE PIECES are starting to fall into place for the Carmel High School boys varsity basketball team. Strong team efforts in their last few outings have the Padres only one-half game behind first-place Alisal.

The outcome of the season will rest upon what happens in the next week when the Padres host Robert Louis Stevenson on Friday, travel to Pacific Grove on Tuesday and finish up the regular Mission Trail Athletic League season three nights later at home against lowly King City.

And things were definitely looking on the bright side after Tuesday night's crucial 42-38 victory over host Palma. The win, which upped the Padres' MTAL record to 7-2, also gained them a measure of revenge against the Chieftains, who won in Carmel's gym back on Jan. 18.

The loss dropped Palma out of second place as it fell to 6-3 and into sole possesion of third place. Pacific Grove, on fire of late, won again Tuesday when it defeated King City. PG, now 5-5, is one-half game ahead of RLS in the battle for fourth place.

Alisal stayed in first place by dismantling Gonzales 80-52. The Trojans get King City, 1-9, on Friday night.

In the victory over Palma, R.J. Powell led Carmel with 15 points, closely followed by Ryan Sanchez and Joey Bernhard, each of whom had 10.

Victory over Gonzales

Despite a slow start last Friday night against Gonzales, the host Padres managed to pull it together and defeat the Spartans, 64-48. After a half in which

RLS is Catalina's 1st hoop victim

IT WAS a week of highs and lows for the Robert Louis Stevenson girls varsity basketball team.

After experiencing a big victory over King City last Friday night, the bottom dropped out on the Pirates as Santa Catalina captured its first win at the expense of RLS on Tuesday night.

The Cougars, who entered the game 0-10 in the Mission Trail Athletic League and 0-16 overall, turned in the game of their season when they notched a 45-40 victory over Stevenson. Catalina outscored RLS 14-0 in the second quarter to spur the victory.

Rachel Maddux topped Pirate scorers with 16 points, while Monica Balestrieri added 10.

The loss dropped Stevenson to 6-5 and into a fourth place tie with Carmel. The Pirates and Padres will meet Friday at 7 p.m. in Pebble Beach.

Stevenson hopes to bring into that game what it apparently left on the court after its significant win over King City. Behind the continued exceptional play of Maddux, who poured in a game-high 17 points, the Mustangs upended previous front-runner King City, 53-43, in a game Friday, Feb. 4 in Pebble Beach. The win marked the first time in more than a decade that RLS had knocked off King City, which always fields a strong girls team.

Even more impressive is that the Pirates pulled off the upset with two starters on the sidelines. Kim Wagstaff was out with an injured ankle and Balestrieri had the flu.

But RLS had big games from Maddux, freshman Erin Miller, Re-

they led by only one, 28-27, the Padres picked up the tempo and played inspired ball in the decisive third quarter when they outscored the Spartans 24-10 en route to the 16-point win.

"We came out a little lazy in the first half, but after a to-the-point pep talk by Coach (Rich) Frank at halftime, we were definitley fired up for the second half," said senior center Jason Edwards.

Powell put on his usual magic show as he played in the mythical "zone." This was the state Powell found himself in the third period, when he came down the court and scored virtually every possession. Powell wound up with 32 points to improve on his 22.1 scoring average, third best in the area.

This was by no means a one-man effort, however, as Sanchez poured in 12 points, all in the second half, to hit double digits in scoring for the fourth consecutive game.

The victory over Gonzales took on added importance as the Padres were to find out that front-running Alisal was edged by upstart Pacific Grove, 52-50, in the Breakers' gymnasium.

"We got the break we needed when Alisal lost to PG," Edwards said. "The next couple weeks will determine if we can take advantage of it."

■ GIRLS BASKETBALL

Two losses, including a 46-37 setback against league leader Notre Dame on Tuesday night, dropped the Padres to fourth place. The loss to Notre Dame followed a disappointing 35-28 loss to Gonzales last Friday night.

Notre Dame holds a one-game advantage over both Pacific Grove and King City, and a three-game cushion over both the Padres and Robert Louis Stevenson. Carmel and RLS hook up Friday at 7 p.m. in Pebble Beach.

Against Notre Dame, the Padres fell behind 26-13 at the half, only to cut the deficit to three late in the contest. It was to no avail, however, as the Spirits regrouped for the nine-point win.

Shannon Dougherty paced CHS with 13 points.

"Even though we lost, we have big games against King City, RLS and PG coming up in the next few weeks that can help to erase this defeats," said Carmel junior Jenn Rosenthal, who leads the team in scoring.

■ SOCCER

With the season about to enter its final week, the Padres endured two tough losses at the hands of Gonzales and King City. Academic regulations and injuries have depleted the Padre unit, at one point leaving them without their entire group of starting forwards.

Avenging their earlier tie, the Gonzales Spartans defeated the Padres 2-0 on Wednesday, Feb. 2. As if this wasn't bad enough, King City trounced Carmel 7-0 two days later. The setbacks dropped Carmel to 3-6-3.

■ FIELD HOCKEY

A loss to York opened up the week on Tuesday, Feb. 1. This game was marked by tough defense, with Sunshine Pinney scoring the lone goal for the Padres.

Carmel then fell to 1-6 in league following a 3-0 loss to Santa Catalina on Thursday, Feb. 3.

■ WRESTLING

Shadd Madsen and Toby Lautterbach were the only wrestlers who picked up wins versus King City in the Thursday, Feb. 3 match.

Madsen, who wrestles in the 189-pound division, won 5-4, while Lautterbach won by a pin.

becca Sampson and Amy Barker. Barker netted 12 points and Sampson had 11, while Miller scored 4 and contributed key plays throughout the game.

■ BOYS BASKETBALL

This loss hurt. The RLS boys suffered through agonizing losses to Carmel and Alisal before being upset by Pacific Grove. Then last Friday night's 45-44 loss at the lands of previously winless King City sent the Pirates reeling to a 4-5 league record after a bright start.

Some measure of consolation, however, is that the Pirates will get a shot at revenge against Carmel — the team that started this slide when they traveled to Pebble Beach on Friday, Jan. 21 and scored an overtime victory over RLS. Tip-off is scheduled for 7 p.m. in the Carmel gym.

RLS, the lone team in the MTAL to have a bye Tuesday night, has fallen to fifth place, one-half game behind Pacific Grove, which defeated King City on Tuesday night.

■ LACROSSE

Four RLS players notched two goals apiece and Tony Lobay chalked up the shutout as the Pirates blanked Dunn 11-0 in a Condor League game held Saturday, Feb. 8 in Pebble Beach.

Vinnie Balestreri, Andy Lieberman, Todd Novick and Jim Hsu each drilled home two goals, while R.J. Satava, Matt Harris and Brett Joseph added one goal each as Stevenson improved its league record to 2-5.

■ SOCCER

Two shutout losses gave the Pirates a blank feeling, no pun intended. A 5-0 loss to Alisal on Wednesday, Feb. 2 combined with a 1-0 setback against Palma two days later dropped RLS' record to 3-10, good for seventh place ahead of Pacific Grove.

Will Staples' goal enabled the Pirate junior varsity to grab a win Friday in Salinas as RLS turned back Palma, 1-0.

■ FIELD HOCKEY

The Pirates ended the season on a high note Monday when Roxanne Klevan notched both goals as RLS upped its record to 8-2 with a 2-0 win over York on a rainy turf in Pebble Beach.

The win allowed Stevenson to bounced back from a tough 2-1 loss to host North Salinas on Thursday, Feb. 3. Justine Descollonges tallied the lone goal.

1994 AT&T Tournament in pictures

It was Johnny's week

likes off Tony Jacklin, Lee Elder, Bruce Devlin and Don Bies. Yes, he may have won the '78 Crosby in a playoff with Ben Crenshaw, but the only place you'll find the other names now are on the Senior Tour.

So for Miller and Watson to come down the stretch fighting it out it in the rain was simply a ray of sunshine for the golf purists and those who refuse to forget this tournament was once "The Crosby." If Miller was a surprise in 1987, he was a shock in 1994.

It will be interesting for all golf fans to tune into Saturday's coverage of the third round of the Los Angeles Open to see if Miller is still perched on a cloud. No doubt, he left the fans who attended and watched the 1994 AT&T Pebble Beach Pro-Am on a definite high.

Budweiser may have been the choice of beer served at the AT&T concession stands, but it was Miller High Life that was served on the course. Refreshingly so.

PEBBLE BEACH Company's R.J. Harper (far right) got out of the wet weather on Sunday to join Pat Summerall and Ken Venturi in the CBS booth on the 18th hole.

JIMMY CONNORS found parts of the game to be humbling, particularly his first-round effort in a sand trap at Spyglass Hill. The tennis star was unable to blast out of the trap on this attempt, but he did show fans during the tournament that he knows what he's doing out on the golf course.

IF ONLY Dudley Hart didn't have to play Pebble Beach. He had two sparkling rounds on Poppy Hills and Spyglass, and was the first- and third-round leader. But Pebble got the best of him as his putting woes on the 18th green Sunday showed.

Carmel Commentary

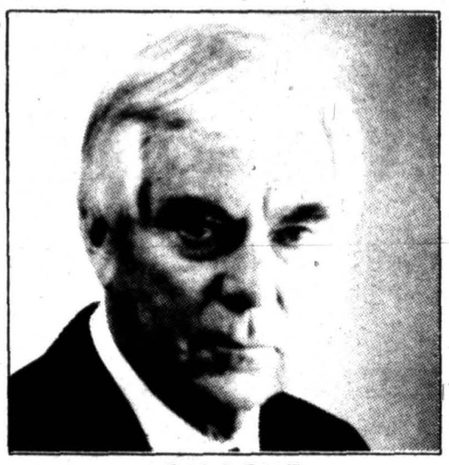
BY LOU ROLLE

As we remember her, let's not forget the Carmel character she cherished

MY WIFE had a love affair. As it might for most men, this could have been rather unsettling for me. Actually, I heartily approved of her affair.

It wasn't a passionate thing but more the comfortable feeling one enjoys from a companion relationship developed over time. My wife's love affair was such that when she passed away recently we held her memorial service on the Carmel Beach.

You see, her love affair was with our small village, Carmel-by-the-Sea. Jane's affection for our town was multifaceted.



LOU ROLLE

Much to love

Take restaurants. She especially liked the steamed clams at Flaherty's, the tempura vegetables at Hanagasa, the onion soup at Bud's Pub, the chicken in a basket at the Bully III, the cheese salad at Paolina's, the Belgian waffles at the Village Corner, to name just some of her favorite establishments.

She liked the style of women's clothes featured at Derek Rayne. Her daily walks to the Post Office were spiced up by a stop at whatever unique shop her route took her by that day.

Walks through Mission Trails Park and along our beach were always highlights. A visit to the Harrison Memorial Library was like a visit with an old friend. Events at Sunset Center were eagerly anticipated.

I mention all this because it especially distresses me when I hear people say Carmel can't survive without the visitors and their money. The premise here is: Whatever creates more visitors helps Carmel to survive. This totally ignores what attracted people to this magic place centuries before the Western World even knew it existed.

During the decades of the fifties and sixties, our family frequently came to Carmel to visit Jane's parents who lived on Dolores Street near town. In those days, there were fewer visitors, many more resident-oriented shops, and Carmel seemed to be surviving just fine.

I suspect in those early days one could find the origin of her love affair with Carmel. Now that Carmel has become world-renowned as a place to visit, we face a challenge. The great numbers of people coming to enjoy the beauty and tranquillity of our area must be balanced against losing, or seriously depreciating, these very qualities that attracted both residents and visitors.

Carmel's allure will fade away if the visitor industry is allowed to overwhelm and eventually destroy the residential character of our village. We need to support the visitor industry. We want our visitors to enjoy their stay and take away happy memories of Carmel's natural beauty as well as the variety of restaurants, art galleries, clothing stores and the myriad other attractions here.

The key here is the automobile — those belonging to visitors and to the people who serve visitors. The area can only support a finite number of cars and tour busses without seriously degrading our residential community.

Our nation's more popular national parks currently struggle to find this delicate balance between development and preserving the original attraction.

Efforts to find a parking solution for our visitor industry have been extensive and ongoing for several years. Proposals have included building a large commercial parking garage downtown, paid parking and peripheral parking lots with shuttle service into town.

The multi-level parking structure finally built at Stanford Shopping Center has only resulted in Los Angeles type traffic congestion there. A parking solution equitable to visitors and equitable to residents is as elusive today as it was five years ago.

Residents, as voters, must be concerned with how the city council deals with this issue. Fortunately, a succession of wise political leaders over the decades have recognized and preserved Carmel's unique qualities, often in the face of fervent development pressures.

Speaking for myself, I don't want the Carmel that so enamored my wife to become just a memory, drowned in a sea of exhaust-spewing vehicles. Carmel can't survive if mammonism replaces enchantment as the driving spirit of our village.

Letters to the Editor

Letters to the editor are welcome. Views on all matters are acceptable, following the guidelines of good taste. Letters should not exceed 350 words in length. Letters are subject to editing for style and length. Each letter must contain name, address, telephone number and signature, and preferably be typed and double spaced. Anonymous letters, or those with no phone numbers will not be accepted.

The credibility factor

Dear Editor:

I was shocked to read in the morning paper that Mayor Ken White had suggested that the City of Carmel might ask the Voice of Carmel to ask certain questions on future polls in order to give the City Council information on specific subjects.

I do commend the mayor, however, for suggesting that future polls give both sides of the issue, not just the one these eight people support.

The Voice of Carmel, Yes on Carmel and Carmel Citizens for Good Government are all pretty much the same small group of people who have a definite political agenda. To think that they should be given credibility by asking them to poll for the city is preposterous.

Most people feel that Voice of Carmel polls consists of loaded questions posed to help them further their political ends. The fact that the results of this latest poll were announced two months before a Carmel election is probably no coincidence.

I am a citizen and resident of Carmel, and I believe wholeheartedly in good government, but this small group won't permit me to join them. Will they allow you to join them?

They are extremely exclusive. Exclusivity makes possible total control. No annoying dissenting voices in this small group. Think about it.

Can it happen here

Dear Editor:

A current television series relates how a nefarious prime minister tries to bring down an altruistic King of England through establishing a powerful constituency of dissident opinion.

To do this, the politician enlists the aid of a media propagandist — an ambitious young woman whose expertise is polling. She says to the prime minister: "Tell me the answer you want, and I'll massage the question to get your answer."

Chilling, isn't it? What seems to be an assessment of public opinion can be turned into manipulation of the public.

A group called The Voice of Carmel has taken five "polls" of Carmel residents' opinions since June 1991, using a letter with a series of questions with discussions, and a response card.

They set great store by their response rate — the majority do not return their card, but 20 percent or more do, it is claimed. However, a postpaid card guarantees that strongly polarized opinion will respond, and the poll's format precludes using thorough questions, or sets of questions which could attempt to be free of the bias of the questioner.

One hopes that Carmel voters study the questions this group asks — their wording and their implications.

Note how quickly the slant of The Voice (called a "California Public Benefit Corporation") is slipped into what seems like summaries or reviews of responses to the previous "surveys."

When they cite percentages pro and con, they are citing percentages of respondents, not the percentage of the city's actual residents or property owners!

Sixty percent of the 20 percent of the total residents who respond equals only 12 percent of all the people — not such a "majority" as to justify the Voice's insinuation that the "council hasn't paid attention to the majority's opinion."

Residents of this town show interest in what happens in Carmel and appear to want to understand the issues confronting it. Open debate or discussion is always encouraged.

What are the motivations of the group of eight listed on the Voice letterhead? Are they using their "polls" to try to discredit the processes of the duly elected City Council and the citizens working on appointed committees and commissions, and claim for themselves a separate power base, a sort of mandate, using what they claim to be the opinions of the residents and property owners of

What a concept! Getting head start on the 1994-95 fiscal year budget

LESS THAN seven months into the 1994-95 fiscal year, the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea has already begun its planning for next year and beyond.

The city's fiscal year begins on July 1, and the annual budget must be adopted by that date. To meet this requirement, the Carmel City Council and city staff have already begun work in earnest.

JERE KERSNAR

Putting together a municipal budget involves a myriad of details, from estimating over 50 different revenue sources to developing the spending details for 17 different budget departments. In 1993-94, the city's total budget will be more than $7.1 million.

Looking ahead

In addition to the "routine" budget process, the next fiscal year budget will include many new or revised approaches, and I welcome the opportunity to describe some of them here.

• Meet and confer: The city council has instructed me to begin the meet and confer process with employee associations for 1994-95, as soon as 1993-94 discussions have concluded.

Consequently, those discussions, regarding salaries, benefits, and so on, can be more effectively integrated into the budget process.

• Five-year plan: Beginning this year, we will be reviewing anticipated revenues and expenditures for the next five years, although only the first year will be covered in the officially adopted budget.

By planning for operating and capital expenditures, and by comparing those expenditures to expected revenues, the city can anticipate its fi-

• Equipment replacement: Beginning next fiscal year, we will be developing a program enabling a more regular and predictable replacement of city vehicles.

In the past, vehicle replacement has occurred as funds were available.

Our experience of recent years has shown that vehicles need to be replaced in a cost-effective way, and that it is financially prudent to do so even when revenues are down.

• Public involvement: Once again, this year the city council is committed to extensive pub-council is committed to extensive public involvement in the process of developing and adopting a final budget.

The staff will present the recommended budget to the city council around June 1, and a series of workshops will be held during the month of June before budget adoption. All of these meetings will be open to the public and well-advertised.

The last two fiscal years have been very difficult ones for Carmel. Our revenues have deminished by more than 15 percent, and we have reduced employee positions by more than 20 percent.

It remains my hope that the city's finances have "turned the corner," and that fiscal year 1994-95 will be a modest improvement. The city staff looks forward to working with the council and residents to make the next budget a workable financial plan that accurately reflects the community's desires.

Getting it straight

Dear Editor:

One of the six enthusiastic non-professionals who compose and conduct the Voice of Carmel polls offered an "interpretation" of the quiz on Sunset remodeling in the Pine Cone.

Yes, the papers say there are eight in the group, but two of them are listed as "emeritus," or no longer active. This was the "interpretation" as reported — "There are those who understand the project and don't support it; and there are those who don't understand the project, and still they don't support it."

Clear enough (with a little work), but isn't the following then also true? — "There are those who don't understand the project and do support it; and there are those who do understand the project, and still they do support it."

Has everybody got that straight now?

Victory for all

Dear Editor:

The contested election for vice president of the Carmel Valley Property Owners' Association has resulted in a victory, not for me personally, but for a return to the traditionally activist, watchdog policies of the CVPOA.

Our membership, by a 221 to 149 vote, endorsed the primary goal of CVPOA: "To preserve, protect and defend the natural beauty and the resources of Carmel Valley."

I would like to thank the The Carmel Pine Cone for having publicized and clarified the issues, which reflected a real difference in philosophy on land use. This was not a contest of personalities.

Dear Editor:

Being a native of the Monterey Peninsula, I have enjoyed reading The Carmel Pine Cone for many years.

I see that you have recently added a column by Beverly Borgman (a person I do not know), whose writing I enjoyed in The Monterey County Herald. Ms. Borgman's column will be a great addition to The Pine Cone.

Keep up the good work.

Al Eisner was outspoken warrior for controlled growth

ings should be conducted in public."

Lightheartedly, Maradei explained Eisner had no "subtle approach" to lend to the art of debate. "He felt very strongly about his causes, and you could be sure you knew where he stood."

There are at least a few tales of how Eisner's tactics rubbed some people the wrong way.

For example, in early 1993, Citizens Against Rezoning placed a full-page ad in The Monterey County Herald, consisting of a series of quotes from travel writers decrying Carmel's commercialism.

The ad was intended to be a vivid caution against commercial expansion, but some Carmelites considered it nothing less than defamation of their hometown.

"It was Al's style to bring the most difficult issues to the fore," Maradei said.

Born Nov. 24, 1930 in Brooklyn, N.Y., Eisner graduated from Brooklyn College with a bachelor's degree, After studying at the New York University Graduate School of Business, he worked in a variety of jobs, including a stint at the Los Angeles Times as an advertising representative and as editor of The Carmel Pine Cone.

In 1973, Eisner and former wife, Judith, founded the Monterey Peninsula Review, a visitors guide. In 1977, the couple bought The Pine Cone, which they ran for five years before selling it to Brown and Wilson, Inc.

"As a publisher, Al got the reputation for being very tough, but he always took his cues from high principals," said Scott MacClelland, a music writer who got his feet wet with a column in The Pine Cone during the late 1960s.

In 1985, Eisner and MacClelland joined together to launch Prelude, a magazine focusing on the arts. While Eisner's involvement lasted only a year, Prelude's incarnations were Pacific Monthly and Monterey Bay Magazine.

Myriad of affiliations

Over the years, Eisner had a myriad of affiliations: Carmel Rotary Club, the Sierra Club, the Odello Land Acquisition fund, the Monterey Peninsula Chamber of Commerce and Visitor and Convention Bureau, the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association and the Hatton Canyon Coalition.

A lover of the outdoors, he also belonged to the Foot Burners Hiking Club and the Monterey Peninsula Yacht Club.

As a supporter of the arts, he had membership with Hidden Valley Music Seminars, the Monterey County Symphony, the Carmel Music Society, the Community Theatre of Monterey Peninsula and the Forest Theater Guild.

Eisner is survived by his wife, Birgit, and children Jessica and Alex.

Eisner had arranged for two memorial gatherings — on the West Coast and East Coast. A private memorial service for close friends and family will be held aboard the Passport on a date to be announced.

AL EISNER debating Measure H in April 1993.

As Eisner will be remembered for his passionate love of the town, Beth Wright, current president of the CRA, commented on a unique ability to put aside personal difficulties: "There is one thing I can say about Al — surely he was a courageous man to take on the Measure H opposition at a time when he was ill."

Hotels sign early union contracts

EIGHT MAJOR Monterey Peninsula hotels have signed a new four-year union contract one year ahead of schedule.

The Hyatt Regency, Holiday Inn, Monterey Beach Hotel, Quail Lodge Resort and Golf Club, Highlands Inn, Bay Park Hotel, Carmel Mission Inn and La Playa Hotel all agreed to work out an agreement with the Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees Union, Local 483, prior to the existing contract's expiration, Aug. 1.

The new agreement extends to July 31, 1998 and provides wage increases of 11 percent, pension gains and a formula designed to protect the insurance benefits.

MPWMD establishes Carmel River Hotline

THE MONTEREY Peninsula Water Management District has established its Carmel River Hotline to provide information on the status of the Carmel River, designed especially for those concerned about erosion.

The hotline number is 649-1993.

Callers will hear a recorded message that includes river flow information — as measured at Esquiline Bridge in Carmel Valley Village — observations of river bank conditions, and a summary of published weather forecasts.

This information will indicate whether the erosion potential along the Carmel River is low or high.

The MPWMD stresses that the hotline should not be used as a guide for specific erosion problems. Property owners along the river should monitor their own erosion conditions.

■ Mementos of artist's 'perpetual courtship' of light at museum

SAM COLBURN'S 'Net Menders,' a watercolor, 'freezes in time what was brought low by commercial overkill.'

By JOHN DETRO

SAM COLBURN was a lover of light. Like most lovers, he started from the outside — form, enchanting planes, solidity. And like all real lovers, he came to celebrate the loved one's essences and movement beyond linear charms.

This venerable watercolorist would have been 85 next month. When he died last December, curator Jo Farb Hernandez already was far past the conceptual stages for Sam's current show at Monterey Peninsula Museum of Art. The deeply human exhibit opened on last Saturday. It will remain up through May 22.

Hernandez stakes out valuable turf — "the early years" during which Sam's style was created the only way a style can be created. With action, practice, hand and spirit and eye together. Learning what the loved one likes. Being taken out of oneself.

We get 57 works, two sketchbooks, wise placement. Themes and dedicatedly representational techniques are established in series; of a sudden, here comes a lyrical burst which escapes outlines and forecasts Sam's future journey into tender abstraction.

On one level, craft and history reign. His fishermen and rural scenes, for example, freeze in time what was brought low by commercial overkill. As

Repertory theater at its finest: MPC offers a literary love story

By KRISTINA S. MEAD

THE MONTEREY Peninsula College Theatre Company's presentation of Shadowlands is an enjoyable, thought-provoking and well-performed production.

Shadowlands, written by William Nicholson and directed by Nick Zanides, is a dramatization of the relationship between C.S. Lewis and Joy Davidson, the brilliant and brassy New Yorker who jolted Lewis out of English donnishness and into the pleasures and pains of marriage.

In the play, as in real life, the prospect of this change and the experience of marriage forced Lewis to reconsider his established opinions about life, art, religion, God and suffering.

While the play is partly about suffering — why God allows us to suffer and how we go about trying to accept the suffering experienced by those we love — there are many lighthearted moments.

The dry humor of the Oxford academics, the affectionate teasing between the Lewis brothers and the battle-of-the-sexes banter between Joy and everyone else provides plenty of leavening.

The college's SRO theater, which seats about 50 people, was the perfect setting for this philosophical drama, in which most of the action involved the alteration of opinions. Sets were simple but effective, consisting of '50s drawing-room furniture, bookshelves, armchairs and a table set with glasses and a decanter of port, supplemented with a hospital bed in Act II.

Similarly, the costumes helped to define the characters and the era without calling too much attention to themselves.

In the best repertory theater tradition, the understated sets and costumes were an excellent backdrop for some superb acting and directing. While the entire cast worked well together, Robert March was outstanding as C.S. Lewis. His voice was a pleasure, and he seemed to inhabit the role completely, with every

Auction of work by Carmel artist will begin AIDS Awareness Week

PAINTINGS BY acclaimed Carmel artist Sharlotte Broudy will be auctioned at 7 p.m. on Sunday at The Great Frame Up, 26350 Carmel Rancho Lane (next to The Barnyard).

All proceeds will benefit the Monterey County AIDS Project (MCAP). A reception at 6 p.m. will precede the auction. Broudy's work is currently displayed at The Great Frame Up.

Born in 1930 in Brooklyn, New York, Broudy suffered from severe arthritis from infancy.

Despite intense pain, she began her career as an artist in New York, dauntlessly facing the challenges thrust upon her by the crippling persistence of arthritis.

Broudy moved to California in 1960, first to San Francisco, then Big Sur and, finally, to Carmel, where she lived until her death. Broudy became an established Carmel figure. She was involved in the Red Cross, the Blood Bank, and the Carmel Foundation.

In 1985, a new surgical technique gave Broudy a mobility she had not enjoyed in years.

A second surgery was required in 1987 and Broudy, aware that transfused blood could be contaminated, donated her own blood for this operation.

Two days later, she was called to the hospital and told she had acquired the AIDS virus from the prior surgery. Broudy went home from the hospital alone in a yellow cab.

The artist became a passionate student of AIDS, doggedly pursuing information about its origins, history and diagnosis. She was a devoted companion to other AIDS victims, and a spokesperson and lecturer for MCAP.

Broudy continued to paint and exhibit her work in galleries and competitions throughout Monterey County. In 1990, realizing her time was short, Broudy carefully catalogued all of her work.

When she died of AIDS in 1991, the artist bequeathed her paintings and art works to MCAP, providing they were sold to raise funds for AIDS research and support. The auction of Broudy's work marks the beginning of this year's HIV/AIDS Awareness Week in Monterey County.

PAINTINGS BY artist Sharlotte Broudy, who was active in the fight against AIDS, will be auctioned at 7 p.m. Saturday to benefit the Monterey County AIDS Project.

Activities will include educational, cultural and fundraising events designed to promote awareness of the HIV/AIDS epidemic. Information is available from Bill Lutz at MCAP at 394-4747.

Portnoy Gallerie will celebrate opening of Miller show Saturday

THIS SATURDAY, Portnoy Gallerie will hold an opening reception for an exhibit of paintings by Larry Miller. The reception will run from 4 to 8 p.m. at the gallery on Sixth Avenue in Carmel.

Miller's landscape paintings depict wilderness scenes and the California coastline. The artist is a native Californian and holds an M.A. in art history from San Jose State University.

He also completed advanced studies at the University of California at Berkeley, the Rhode Island School of Design and the Los Angeles Art Center in Pasadena.

After a number of years of teaching studio art and art history, Miller retired to the Monterey Peninsula to devote himself full-time to painting. He has exhibited at the San Francisco Museum of Art, the Oakland Museum and San Francisco Museum of Modern Art.

'SPYGLASS HILL' by Larry Miller is an example of the artist's fondness for the California coastline as a subject. The opening reception for Miller's exhibit will be held from 4 to 8 p.m. Saturday at Portnoy Gallerie in Carmel.

Striking photographs raise political questions in Rodchenko show

By BILLY EVANS

CONSTRUCTIVISM, A Russian-born strain of early abstract art, had as one of its founding members Alexander Rodchenko, whose photographs are on display through Feb. 18 at the Center for Photographic Art on San Carlos and Ninth in Carmel.

In the early 1900s, and up to Stalin's outlawing of art organizations in 1932, Russia was a hotbed of philosophy, religion and the arts.

Dawn of abstraction

During this time, paintings with varying degrees of abstraction were being created in different parts of Europe. Artists were reacting against outdated styles of painting incapable of expressing their immediate personal sensations and new social views.

Out of this ferment, the Russians created what was to be called constructivism. This was an art glorifying the machine, dynamic action and industrialization intent on freeing the poor working man.

There came to be two camps in the constructivist school. The first, represented by Malevich, Gabo and Pevsner, sought an art created with purely abstract means.

The second, led by Tatlin and apparently including Rodchenko, called for the "abolition of art as an outlived aestheticism belonging to the culture of capitalist society" and pronounced the need "to make things useful for human beings in their material surroundings — to make chairs and tables, to build ovens, houses, etc."

Interrupting these aesthetic debates was Stalin's outlawing of all art organizations in 1932. What was now being demanded was service to the revolution, and that meant that narrative art which could serve as propaganda was in enforced vogue.

Constructivism had thus ended in Russia, although it had important repercussions outside of the country, most notably in schools like the Bauhaus, where art, architecture and craft were combined.

Rodchenko stayed on as a photographer for the propaganda mouthpiece called USSR in Construction.

The current show of Rodchenko's photographs presents pictures taken between 1924 and 1940. The early 1924 pictures are mostly portraits done in a fairly straightforward style, with some of the dynamic design typical of constructivist painting.

Graphic dynamism

The second grouping could be categorized as more pronouncedly constructivist in feel, using sharp vectors and very high or very low angles from which to shoot the subject. The subjects in these works seem chosen for visual reasons rather than as documentation.

These works of boats, trees, building columns and street scenes are shot from unusual perspectives, creating a graphic dynamism and a play between positive and negative space.

The best of them are cropped and printed so as to cause the viewer's perception to waver in a temporarily ambiguous reading of two-dimensional or three-dimensional space. This is a visual device elegantly used by Brett Weston and on which the contemporary painter Ellsworth Kelly has hinged a whole career.

The third grouping, done presumably while Rodchenko was a staff photographer for USSR in Construction magazine, can be categorized as documentary or propaganda.

The show's catalogue, The Utopian Dream, Photography in Soviet Russia 1918-1939, quotes Rodchenko as saying his "photo-moments have a value as documents and not artistic objects."

This third group of photographs catalogues what the Bolsheviks wanted fed to their population as well as to the West. We see large public construction projects, an athletic and happy populace, a unified and marching nation. The message is progress.

How Rodchenko actually felt about the Bolsheviks, one does not know. Was Rodchenko one of the true believers in socialism? The movement's idealistic views were engaged happily by many. But when did the repressive acts of Stalin break through the deceptive facade that Rodchenko was helping to create with his photographs?

In a telling photograph, not in the show but in the catalogue, El Lissitsky, an avant-garde painter, is staging a clichéd picture of the noble and heroic Bolshevik soldier with dramatic lighting and pitched angles. Apparently Lissitsky worked for the government, too. But even Lissitsky, who may have initially been attracted to the party, eventually saw through the facade, left Russia and continued his career elsewhere.

Was Rodchenko a prisoner? Did he continue with his propaganda photography to put bread on the table? Was he a true believer until the end? How could he have been?

With the historic opening up of the former Soviet Union, and this show is certainly part of that, it will be important to document precisely and without sentiment what will be found while drawing aside the Iron Curtain.

Whatever Rodchenko's politics, his eyes did not fail him. The photographs stand on their own, his documentary pictures creating a facade of the most grandiose proportions.

KATY'S PLACE

'The toast of the town'

WHEN RECOMMENDING a place to have breakfast in Carmel, the name of one restaurant keeps popping up.

Katy's Place, located in the heart of Carmel-by-the-Sea, has been serving the most extensive breakfast menu in the village for 12 years. Nobody leaves hungry.

The success of Katy's Place is due largely to the tireless efforts of Master Chef Ari Georgsson, a graduate of the Culinary Academy of Iceland.

Georgsson, who has owned and managed Katy's Place for the past five years, also is widely renowned as the former executive chef of the Covey Restaurant at Quail Lodge, where he worked for many years.

What makes Katy's stand apart from its competitors?

"For one thing, it's what you get for the money," Georgsson said. "It's the humongous portions – all the homemade food we put on your plate.

"When you leave, you're satisfied," Georgsson added. "That's the biggest difference."

Consider the nine different variations of eggs Benedict available at Katy's, each including three ranch eggs poached to order, perched atop an English muffin and served with a rich homemade hollandaise sauce and seasoned country potatoes. Sauteed vegetables, crab, shrimp, salmon and turkey are among the tempting possibilities.

Whether seeking a great omelette or eggs any style, Katy's Place has exactly what you're craving at a price you can live with. All breakfasts at Katy's are priced at less than $10.

Served with country potatoes and choice of toast and jam, you can enjoy your morning eggs with hickory smoked, thick-sliced bacon, Italian sausage, traditional pork sausage, cured ham steak, New York steak, lox, trout, calamari, even smoked North Atlantic herring.

And there are still more choices: cheese-filled blintzes covered with fresh berries and sour cream; home-made corned beef hash and eggs; huevos rancheros; fresh fruit waffles, French toast and six varieties of buttermilk pancakes.

Breakfast all day

While breakfast at Katy's is served all day, the lunch menu has a lot to offer hungry patrons as well.

There are award-winning hamburgers and sandwiches, served with your choice of country potatoes, mixed greens or potato salad.

Lunch specials include Katy's popular calamari jack burger, a calamari filet lightly breaded and grilled with Monterey Jack cheese.

There also are two different chicken breast sandwiches, a shrimp quesadilla, and the New Yorker – a bagel topped with smoked salmon, cream cheese, capers and onions.

Or, for something light, try one of Katy's salads. Choose between a shrimp salad, chef salad, tuna or chicken salad, or fresh fruit salad with yogurt.

While Georgsson says salespersons come to his restaurant every week trying to sell him cheaper foods that will save him money, he remains stubborn in his commitment to quality.

"I tell them, 'I don't want anything cheap, I want the best,'" Georgsson said. "When it comes right down to it, you're really not saving much by buying anything cheap.

"The quality comes through," he added. "People appreciate that."

During warm weather, patrons can be seen dining and conversing beneath the redwood trees on Katy's outdoor patio, which has become quite popular, according to Georgsson.

Retrospective sculpture exhibit at Ledbetter focuses on female form

INTERNATIONALLY EXHIBITED Bay Area sculptor Lori Kay will present a show entitled The Inward Gaze: A Decade of Bronze/Selected Sculptures at the Ledbetter Gallery in Carmel.

The exhibit will run through March 12 with an opening reception from 3 to 7 p.m. this Saturday.

This retrospective show spans from 1984 to 1994 and illustrates the evolution of Kay's figurative work.

The artist uses the traditional medium of bronze to explore the female form. Kay casts, welds and patinas her own work. She uses the lost wax process, which is approximately 5,000 years old.

Kay received a B.A. in art and art history from the University of California at Santa Cruz, with additional coursework at the University of Geneva and Basel Gymnasium, Switzerland. Kay also spent a year in the foundries of Pietrasanta, Italy.

The Ledbetter Gallery is located in the Morgan Court, on Lincoln Street between Ocean and Seventh. Gallery hours are from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily.

Streicher Trio performance a fresh take on early music

By LYN BRONSON

LAST FRIDAY evening at the Church of Religious Science in Monterey, the Mozart Society of California presented the Streicher Trio in a sparkling concert of piano trios using replicas of 18th century instruments.

Pianist Charlene Brendler, violinist Carla Moore and cellist Sarah Freiberg made a persuasive case for the use of early instruments by presenting solid musical fare and playing with a great deal of musical precision and charm.

Although both violinist Moore and cellist Freiberg played instruments strung in the 18th century fashion, with straight necks and no chin rests, their historically correct instruments sounded so similar to modern ones that I doubt whether most people in the audience would have been aware of their use, had it not been stated in the printed program.

The principal attraction in this concert was the novelty of seeing on stage a beautifully crafted, 18th century style fortepiano in a lovely mahogany case instead of the regulation ebonized Steinway.

The instrument drew a large crowd of admirers to the stage to examine it during the intermission.

Lightly strung and with a delicate action, this instrument produces velvety sounds and a clarity which blends remarkably well with other instruments. Although not an unusual sight on the college circuit, the presence of a fortepiano in concert is still an uncommon occurrence in the provinces.

In fact, even the term "fortepiano" in its present meaning is a relatively new phenomenon. If you were transported back 50 years in a miraculous time machine and visited a jewelry store, asking to see an "analog" watch, you would receive nothing but puzzled stares, for the retronym "analog" as applied to timepieces only came into use in the 1970s, when the digital watch gained wide acceptance.

Similarly, if you were speaking to a musician 50 years ago and used the term "fortepiano," it probably would have been understood as a quaint, obsolete name for the pianoforte.

Well, we have come a long way in a short time period, so that we accept concerts on older style instruments, not as a curiosity, nor as a nostalgic spectacle, but as a way of coming closer to an understanding of earlier music undistorted by 19th and 20th century attitudes.

The three young musicians of the Streicher Trio played with a naturalness and lack of pretension which has also come a long way from the days when concerts of early music tended to make a nostalgic act of suggesting an earlier time with candlelight and sometimes even period costumes.

One of the highlights of the concert was the development section of the Mozart Trio in G Major, K.564, where after a pleasant romp through the sunny key of G Major in the exposition section, we were suddenly plunged in the dark key of D Minor.

Also much to be admired was the trio's magnificent performance of the finale of the Mozart Trio in C Major, K.548, in which the silvery scales of the fortepiano blended in a magical way with the strings.

The members of the Streicher Trio are residents of California, a fact increasingly noted in the concert world. Once upon a time you had to be based on the East Coast to have a decent career. More and more young musicians have found a better quality of life on the West Coast, and classical music audiences are enjoying the benefits of this development.

Jazz Tides

By JOHN DETRO

Sonny Rollins, Shirley Horn will play next Monterey Jazz Festival; Bay Blues Festival president dies

FOR SOME months now, folks have been asking the question. How in 1994 will honcho Tim Jackson of Monterey Jazz Festival be able to match last year's brilliant programming?

The next edition will be held at our fairgrounds on Sept. 16-17-18. And Tim's response to that poser began to emerge this week.

He revealed that the coming batch of headliners will include tenor sax giant Sonny Rollins, vocalist and pianist Shirley Horn, keyboardist Billy Childs, the big band fronted by extraordinary reedman Bob Mintzer, tenorist Grover Washington Jr., pianist and composer James Williams.

Rollins, of course, worked the first MJF and was part of the famed 1958 jam session at Mission Ranch following the Saturday night fairgrounds sets.

Going head to head with Sonny was Gerry Mulligan. San Francisco tenorman Brew Moore played a major role — as did late local drummer Ernie Sheriff.

The late drummer and writer Richard Barker penned a fine article about that jam. I happen to have a copy of the literary magazine in which it ran more than 35 years ago — so get in touch through The Pine Cone if you'd like to borrow the publication and pull a Xerox.

Godspeed, Lewis

His friends and colleagues knew the word was coming, and it came down last Sunday morn. Lewis Jackson, president of Monterey Bay Blues Festival, had died the evening before (Feb. 5) at Community Hospital. Cancer.

At this writing, plans for a memorial service still were being firmed up. And though no official announcement has yet been made, it seemed certain to some other board members that the ninth annual fest (June 25-26 at the fairgrounds) would be dedicated to him.

His wife Jetta and other family members were with Lewis at the end. He also was head of Seaside Community Services and very active in service clubs.

If you were in a place listening to music and the place suddenly felt a bit brighter, chances were that you'd turn and see that Lewis had come through the door. The late vibist Bill Jackson had the same effect; jazz photographer Will Wallace has it still — no wonder the three men shared such strong bonds.

Mary Ellen Harris, Blues Fest first vice-president, will preside at least until the next board election in September.

Lee Durley, Blues Fest talent chairperson, also was very close to Lewis. Part of Lee's personal tribute was to carry on and announce the June lineup. It contains some sweet surprises.

Confirmed for the main stage: Gladys Knight, Lou Rawls, Clarence Carter, Dorothy Moore, Johnny Otis Revue, Charlie Musselwhite, Lowell Fulson, Little Milton, Barbara Morrison, Otis Clay Big Band, Sista Monica, Roy Rogers.

And check this out. On the Garden Stage will be the good-sized band of classic tenorman and shouter Joe Houston. Big Joe Houston doing what he does so beautifully. Great touch.

Johnny Otis, of course, has been a major developer of talent for decades. He now lives in the San Francisco Bay Area.

Last year's festival had massively popular acts. This year's seems geared to experienced blues fans — those who really know the value of Fulson, Otis, Big Joe, Clay. More names will be reported as soon as signed contracts come back.

About Billy

Congratulations are in order. Billy DeBerry, the Blues Fest's immediate past president, was named Monterey Peninsula Unified School District superintendent at a special board meeting earlier this month. He was scheduled to take the reins on Feb. 12.

A much-experienced administrator with the district, Billy got a standing ovation when his appointment was made known. The choice was unanimous.

DeBerry immediately shared the spotlight with his wife, Rose. He said she was always there for him and was, in fact, "my hero."

Nancy Dalton, former suprintendent, resigned. Bob Infelise served as interim superintendent.

"Billy guided the (blues) board with purpose and professionalism," said a festival source. "Even when there were controversies, things didn't get out of hand."

One year, a main stage performer unwisely drove a golf cart out into the crowd. Panic at the top would have made the matter worse. Billy kept his cool and — with a few other key people — ended the threat to viewer safety very quickly.

Too much foreshadowing in tearful, predictable 'Shadowlands'

By SUSAN CANTRELL

SHADOWLANDS
Crossroads Cinemas, Carmel
Starring: Anthony Hopkins and Debra Winger
Director: Sir Richard Attenborough
Rating: ★★

THE TEARFUL Shadowlands is an undeniably engrossing movie, full of life and love and dying, set in the misty countryside of Oxford, England.

One can recognize its merits quickly enough. We are impressed by director Sir Richard Attenborough's ability to move us with his misty scenes — misty both geographically and emotionally.

Debra Winger, who portrays American poet Joyce Gresham, has never been finer in her reading of a brazen Jewish woman. Finally, Winger manages to present some depth and complexity to a character.

Then, of course, there is the consummate actor Anthony Hopkins, portraying C.S. Lewis. Promising so far? Well, the only problem with this movie is there are no surprises.

Biography as drama

It is as predictable and sentimental as Love Story (1970) and Brian's Song (1971). Long before these lovers meet and marry, and tragedy befalls them, the viewer becomes practiced at guessing their lines.

For example, in the scene where C.S. says he can't let Joyce return to the United States, we must endure the following:

"I can't let you go," he says.

"But I must go," she responds.

"No, I cannot let you."

The word trite comes to mind.

And in other important ways, this movie fails at subtlety. The subplot concerning Gresham's son, Doug, offers no surprises either. It becomes too clear too early that Lewis will eventually adopt the boy; the son puts up no struggle, even though his whole life in America is going to be uprooted by the impending adoption.

And no one even wrinkles an eyebrow when C.S. Lewis eventually gives into his love for Gresham.

Unfortunately, Attenborough chooses the most simplistic route, the love story, only to offer a mere sketch of Lewis' work and Gresham's genius. You forget this is supposed to be a story about the fervent Christian author of Mere Christianity and the mind behind The Chronicles of Narnia.

Nor is there any mystery when Lewis repeats the adage: "You can only know joy when the thing you most want is just out of grasp." Sound familiar?

More canned slogans are:

"Books make people feel they're not alone." "You must experience to truly understand." "You must believe what a person does, not what he says."

It's grating to watch the professor preach to his class: "We are stones to be chiselled by the great master," and "Learning only occurs with suffering" — which, ironically, Lewis avoids like the plague.

It is no surprise Hopkins was cast for this role — in light of his trademark uptight characters in Remains of the Day (1993) and Howard's End (1992).

By the end, all this suffering, love and learning is tied into a too neat bow. The film's climax is an overdone, maudlin manipulation of our emotions.

Perhaps this time around, Hopkins' performance does not merit an Academy award nomination. Considering his tremendous talent, this is our friend on automatic pilot, as though acting in his sleep.

True, for Winger, this is a departure. But it is a shame the film falls short as a vehicle for her newfound abilities.

And, finally, it is no surprise that we cry, but not because the movie is masterfully crafted or brilliantly scripted. We are in the grip of a time-worn but effective plot: Couple falls in love, gets married, tragedy befalls them and there is painful parting.

At least we are consoled that Hopkins, known for his stoic portrayals, cries as much as we do.

Forget It ★ Fair ★★ Good ★★★ Excellent ★★★★

SOROPTIMISTS OF Carmel Bay volunteered as ushers and ticket-takers at the annual AT&T volunteer party at the Monterey Conference Center. Outfitted in snappy red visors, sweaters and smiles are: Marlene Carlson, Lee Chamberlain, Kathy Ritter, Elinor Laiolo and Linda Lamb.

GEORGE DOVOLIS, a volunteer among the members of the 40-Year Club, was surrounded by women at the party. They are daughters Linda Ball and Joyce Scampa, and wife Melene Dovolis.

LONGTIME AT&T volunteers Ed Magner, in charge of tourney cars and vans, and Ron Meredith mingled with the hordes who relished the fine cuisine at the party.

EVEN THE Carmel High School Jazz Band got into the act during the feeding frenzy at the numerous buffet tables.

BIRD'S EYE view of the AT&T volunteer party, where 1,000 plus workers, their friends and families came from far and wide to be entertained by superb cuisine and entertainment.

HAPPILY GREETING many of the 500-plus guests who attended The Pebble Beach Co.'s tent party on the 3rd fairway Sunday was Hiroshi Watanabe, executive vice president of Lone Cypress Co., his wife Masako and daughter Naoko.

Golf, gophers and Groundhog Day

IF THE groundhog came out of its hole in Pebble Beach this Feb. 2, it may not have seen its own shadow, but it would have witnessed the shadows of hundreds of fanatics golfing their brains out during the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

Now, I know some female golfers as well as male. Some of them claim not to be addicted to the game. They can enjoy it and take it for what it is – a sport, to be enjoyed occasionally.

On the other hand, there are several other men I've known who wake up to view the golf course from their picture windows. After rising, they read the sports section, jump into their plaid, mismatched pants and shirts; clomp with their cleats across the hardwood floors, flicking their cigar butts as they go, and say, "Bye, honey. I'll see you when the game's over."

Honey usually waits 'til the dinner has been reheated three times and finally goes down to the club to fish him out of the bar. If the hero decides to go back with her, he stands in the living room practicing his swing with an invisible club while she prepares dinner, or divorce papers...

A negative stereotypical view, I will admit. Maybe it's because I took golf lessons in college, tore a muscle in my side and got laughed off the driving range for doing pirouettes and for driving divots instead of balls.

I tried to like golf. I even played a go-fer for a boyfriend on several world famous courses. It was a gas tearing around in one of those little kiddie cars. But, honestly, can't a person carry his or her own clubs? As I see it, it's the only action in this dull game.

A person needs aerobic exercise – working up a continuous sweat and keeping the heart pumping for at least 20 minutes uninterrupted. I remember my dad, a physician, dashing out to the golf course more than once to revive a heart attack victim whose only exercise was to shout at their caddy each weekend.

As for men, it's always been my contention that they fish, hunt, golf, etc. to have an excuse to be out in nature with the wind and the trees and the animals. It would be too "sissyfied" to just go on a picnic or sit and enjoy the terrain.

But this doesn't explain female golf fanatics, does it?

Guess I'm missing something...

I didn't miss anything...

...on Friday afternoon, however, when I parked near The Inn at Spanish Bay and walked over to the tournament.

Clouds, like mounds of shaving cream, were piled above the pines. The rest of the sky was blue, blue, blue. The fairways were spread out like green felt on a pool table and tourists were stopping traffic to photograph deer and Canadian honkers nibbling on the course.

It was a fine day for golf. I decided to walk through the residential section to get to the lodge and was euphoric looking at plum trees laden with pink cotton balls, gardens sprouting calla lilies and listening to little birds twitter in the oak trees.

I walked the oceanside trail past Bird Rock and laughed at the seals cavorting in the water – just like my cats at home, doing somersaults and bouncing off the furniture.

I noticed a lot of people were walking long distances and several asked for directions back to their cars. "I parked in a place where I won't have to get into the traffic jams," they'd say, and end up in the jam anyway. Or, worse yet, fall to their knees with heat prostration.

Now, these people were getting exercise. Maybe I spoke too soon about the game of golf.

At any rate, I never made it to the course on that day because I got sidetracked by nature. Tsk, tsk...

Cynicism Aside...

I am awed by anyone who can control their minds and muscles, and estimate the wind factor well enough to put a ball where they want it. I can't even see the ball until it drops. Maybe that's why the game is dull from a spectator's point of view. Why can't the balls be pink and make a noise so I can see the slice, or the cut, or whatever you call it?

Golf 'rains' supreme at PB party

I must tell you that I experienced the most elegant "port-a-potty" I've ever known at Tom Oliver's brunch and tent party on the last day of the golf tourney. As wind whipped up the mammoth white tent like sails on a yacht, women walked a pathway lined with flowers to the three-stall powder room replete with a sink.

Inside, Oliver, president of Pebble Beach Co., stood for hours greeting some 500 guests who came in from the rain. His wife, Margaret, dressed in a plaid wool skirt and matching scarf, graciously did the same, greeting some 500 friends and community leaders.

My friend and I were among the wettest of them all. We were denied entry to a media shuttle by a vigilant traffic controller. An invitation to the party simply wouldn't do – it had to be a badge.

Any complaints were soon forgotten while we grazed from one food station to the next.

"I'm eating myself sick," said Dean Flippo, Monterey County district attorney. We had just been talking about food and how the homeless learn to binge when they do find food. We wondered what would be done with the pounds of leftovers from the lavish party... distribution would probably be the hitch.

Helen Westland, a voice of the community long associated with Hospice of the Central Coast, enjoyed the repast. And Kip Hudson, recently named "Outstanding Citizen" by the Monterey Peninsula Chamber of Commerce, and I met at the dessert table.

Tom and Betsy Lobay were our tablemates, and I soon discovered they were my kind of people. She admitted she isn't that interested in golf. And Tom, who as a city employee can play any time, only does so every four years.

I was in good company.

Some things old, some things new...

Celebrated performers at the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am party for volunteers pretty much did a rehash of favorite songs and jokes told year after year at the Monterey Conference Center.

Phil Harris, age 89, brought the house down again with his little ditty about "old dogs, little chillun' 'n watermelon wine."

Tommy Smothers did his yo-yo in the pocket trick, only missing the pocket once. It was his 52nd birthday and he was forgiven.

B.J. Thomas sang his beloved, "Raindrops Keep Fallin' on my Head" (he is responsible for the Sunday downpour).

But there were a few new twists. Campbell added a verse to his song, "I Owe my Soul to the Country Club Pros." It went like this: "I played with Murray and I kicked his butt; I got a Pebble Beach high 'cause I made the cut."

Of course, Jack Lemmon didn't make the cut. And, sorry to say, he wasn't at the party either.

Huey Lewis was there and charmed the socks off the ladies.

And a young political cartoonist from the San Diego Tribune, Steve Kelly, did some sensational stand-up comedy. Most of it is unprintable, however.

But the most heavily applauded star was one who said, after 50 years, he was finally invited onto the stage. That was Ted Durein, founder of the Bing Crosby Pro-Am Golf Tournament.

Little did he know back in '46 that the tourney would raise more than $1 million each year for local charities.

Psst...

Give yourself and your loved one a romantic Valentine's Day present. Jonathon Lee, passionate local pianist, will play from his many cassettes and CDs from 5 to 8 p.m. on Feb. 14 at The Paul Masson Wine Tasting Room, 700 Cannery Row. Call 646-5446.

PETER UEBERROTH (right), former commissioner of Major League Baseball, was in a golfing mode Sunday afternoon as he chatted with Monterey attorney Jonathan Battey and Judy Pennycook, a former Monterey County supervisor who is again seeking election to the board.

WHILE THE rain fell outside, Paul and Emily Woudenberg of Pebble Beach found every reason to smile inside the tent during Sunday's brunch.

CONGRESSMAN SAM Farr was but one of an array of politicians to attend Sunday's festivities. He is pictured here with Lorraine Ellzey and Col. Tom Ellzey, who will soon be retiring from the Army where he spent 27 years, most recently as a commander at Fort Ord.

THE PINE Cone's own food columnist Wendy Brodie and Ventana Inn's Bob Bussinger were among the many admirers of Sunday's brunch spread by the Pebble Beach Co.

Colburn show emphasizes artist's 'sheer joy of doing'

Hernandez says via her essay in the handsome catalogue accompanying the show: "The strength of his color palette, his simplicity of form and his economy of line caused commentators to compare him to East Coast artist John Marin . . . ."

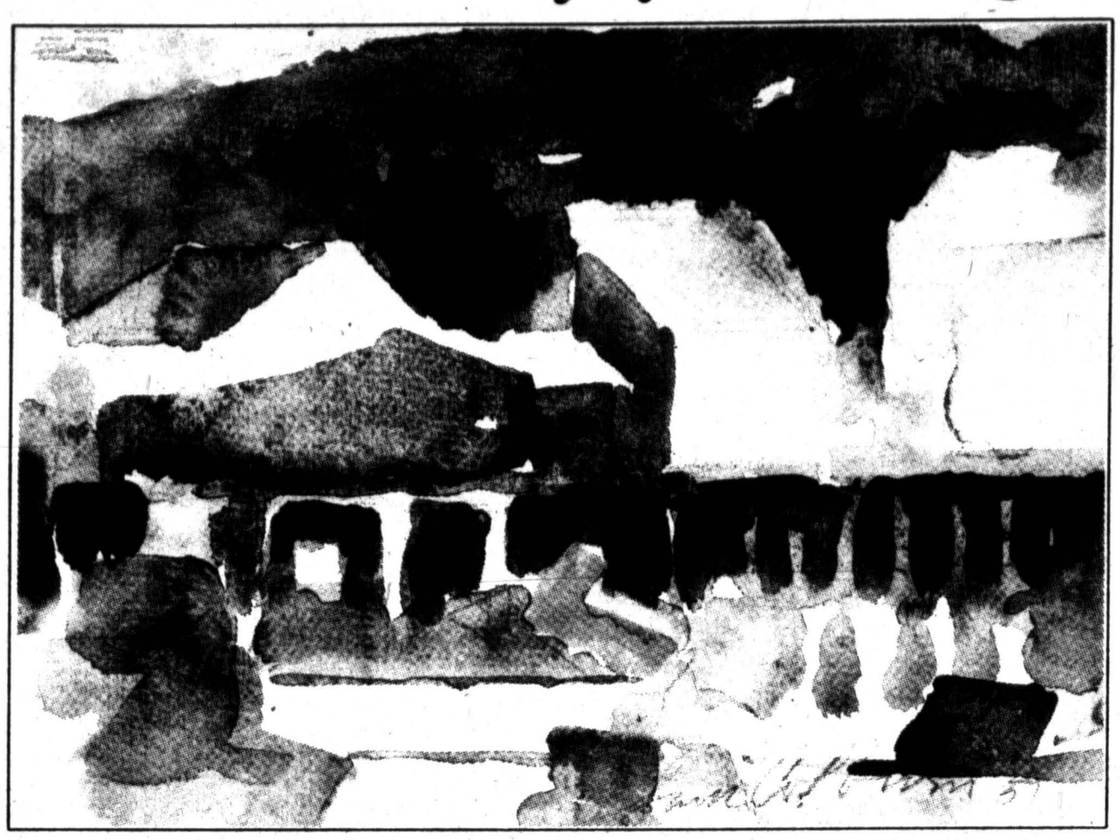
On another level, surprise and his sheer joy of doing steal the viewer's affection. One watercolor of green hills packs such a subtly erotic charge — Eros plus the witty wink — that one chuckles innocently with Sam. Those hills are womanly and cherished. Any artist who doesn't flirt with the light had better pack up and go sell shoes, he states without blush or stammer.

Red Rocks from 1940 (pastel and graphite on paper) took Sam closer to his visual poetics of the years ahead. Passionate reds and greens, pink earth. This frank and fresh celebration is the one from this exhibit that I'd like to take home — the man's great heart seems afire there.

One cannot walk along these walls without thinking about Sam's other half: the painter Grace Meredith Colburn. Adepts tell us that the inner and outer are equal. It's pretty obvious he could not have rendered such calm and lovely houses if his own home weren't a place he liked a lot. (Technique is only the beginning.)

The catalogue ($10) contains full-color reproductions and anecdotes gathered by writer Steve Hauk. The Hernandez paragraphs stress Sam's lifelong lack of stasis — that perpetual courtship.

Sam Colburn was a real character and incisive critic. This show will help keep our ducks in order, help us remember him for the rightest reasons. He remains an important artist; his evolution can inspire younger practitioners to love as he loved.



COLBURN'S 'WHARF,' a watercolor and graphite on paper, is one of the artist's many works from the '30s, '40s and '50s displayed at the museum through May 22.

SANDI DIHL of Stonewhite Ceramic Design will exhibit her black and metallic gold glazed jars and vases at the sixth annual 'Whale of an Art Show' this weekend at Custom House Plaza in Monterey.

gesture and expression arising as if by instinct.

Elaine Davis (Joy Davidson) did a good job with what is probably a difficult, cliché-ridden role. Her New York accent was well-balanced: strong enough to remind us of her background and "outsider" status without being overdone.

Michael Kelly was charming as the chauvinistic but ultimately understanding Professor Riley. As a diffident don and a wry Scottish doctor, Michael Lojkovic stole several scenes, becoming more and more appealing with each entrance.

With the exception of a stagy fall, the directing was extremely well done. It's hard to know without looking at the script, but it appears as if Zanides and his actors have added a good deal of depth and development to their characters. The feeling the audience gets is that Zanides has been able to inspire the cast to work at the peak of its abilities.

The play is rapidly paced — it moves swiftly from one scene to the next. This works best in the first half of the play, when the characters are being established and the tension between Lewis and Joy, Lewis and his friends, and Joy and Lewis' friends is increasing.

In the second half, it sometimes seems as if pressure to race through the biography controls the pacing. Because there are a lot of important events to cram in, some of the overall intensity and momentum is lost. But this is perhaps a fault of the script.

The play does have some flaws. It relies too much on the technique of having certain key lines repeated over and over again, with the difference in context demonstrated by the contrast in the change of character.

This is a tried-and-true method of indicating development, but it doesn't seem appropriate in a play in which one of the main themes is C.S. Lewis' transition from perceiving life through art to becoming fully involved in life itself.

The program was interesting but a little peculiar. It contained an essay on C.S. Lewis and Christianity, a concise biography of C. S. Lewis, and a short commentary on his writings.

This is all worthwhile information, but more information about the play itself, its writing, and the playwright would have been appreciated.

All in all, the acting, directing and very capable production staff make this play a must-see.

Carmel Music Society sponsors concert by competition winner

ON WEDNESDAY, the Carmel Music Society will present last year's competition winner Thorsten Encke in concert at 8 p.m. in Carmel's Sunset Center. Pianist Franziska Melcher will perform with Encke.

Tickets for Wednesday's performance may be purchased for $10 at the door or by calling 625-9938.

The German-born Encke began studying the cello at age 10. He has won several prizes in international competitions and has performed at the Stans Institute and the Ravinia Festival.

From 1988 to 1991 he participated in the European Community Youth Orchestra. Encke came to the United States in 1992 to study with cellist Lynn Harrell at the University of Southern California.

One of last year's competition judges, cellist George Barati, commented about Encke, "That right arm — I don't think you'll see anybody with that much strength except Yo-Yo Ma."

Franziska Melcher, born in Hamburg, Germany, began her piano studies at age 4. She got her diploma Musikerzichung at the Musikhochschule Hannover and finished her studies in 1991 with the diploma Kunstlorische Reife.

Wednesday's program will include pieces by Beethoven, Lutoslawski, Schubert and de Falla.

Preparing the home for a natural disaster

IT SEEMS every night, news of yet another natural or accidental disaster fills the airwaves. Earthquakes in California, floods in the Midwest, hurricanes in Hawaii and Florida, firestorms that engulf neighborhoods ... disasters of every type seem to occur often, but usually in someone else's backyard.

Then one day when you least expect it, disaster strikes in your own community, and it's too late to "get prepared."

Taking some simple steps now to prepare yourself and your loved ones for a potential disaster will improve your chances for survival and your emotional response in an earthquake, flood or fire. According to preparedness experts, anxiety and fear about the unknown — for example, the whereabouts of family members — only compounds the turmoil caused by a disaster.

Developing a step-by-step response plan — including information about emergency precautions, where to find help and how to establish a family communications network — will better equip you to survive in the hours immediately following a catastrophe. It will also help you to keep calm and provide more effective assistance to your family, friends and neighbors.

Emergency response experts recommend that all families take the following steps to prepare for potential disasters:

• Hold a family meeting. Talk about how each family member will get home from wherever they usually go in a crisis situation. Establish an alternative reunion site. Take into consideration the fact that you and your family may not be able to leave work and school locations immediately after a disaster.

• Identify one out-of-state relative or family friend who each family member can contact following an emergency. Long-distance phone lines often remain intact when local circuits have become inoperative.

• Find out about neighborhood emergency preparedness programs. If you have school-age children, talk to school administrators to acquaint yourself with their standard procedures.

• Obtain disaster preparedness brochures from your local chapter of the American Red Cross.

• Determine if your place of employment offers a disaster response plan, and if not, encourage the establishment of emergency procedures and supplies.

• Prepare disaster kits for your home, office and car. The local Yellow Pages, your state office for disaster preparedness and the American Red Cross are all useful sources of information. Various-sized, ready-made kits are available for purchase in many stores. Remember to rotate food and water in your disaster

- Learn how and when it is safe to turn off utilities following a disaster, and become aware of potentially dangerous electrical circuitry.
- Make certain that at least one family member knows how to perform CPR and basic first aid. Your local Red Cross chapter offers classes in these life-saving techniques.
- Make the plan as simple as possible. You can't plan for everything.
- Once the planning is complete, hold a dress rehearsal with the whole family. Look for kinks and iron them out. Hold a test run at least once each year.
